BREAST CANCER RATES RISING AMONG AFRICAN AMERICAN WOMEN

Death rates among black women were 42 percent higher than white women in 2012, according to new research

by Marisa Taylor, courtesy of Aljazeera.com

Breast cancer rates are rising among African-American women, closing a longstanding gap with rates of the illness among white women, according to a report released Thursday.

Breast cancer rates in black women rose by about 0.4 percent each year between 2008 to 2012, but were stable among white, Latina and Native-American women during the same time period.

By 2012 breast cancer rates were higher among black women than white women in seven U.S. states — Alabama, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma and Tennessee — according to the annual report on breast cancer statistics by the American Cancer Society (ACS), published in “CA: A Cancer Journal for Clinicians.”

The researchers said they don't know why breast cancer rates have been on the rise among black women.

They noted, however, that black women had increasing incidences of estrogen-receptor-positive cancer — meaning that the cancer cells grow in response to the hormone estrogen — a type of cancer that has been linked to obesity.

They also said that although the breast cancer cases rose among Asian-American women — a 1.5 percent increase per year during the 2008 to 2012 period — they still have the lowest rates among any group.

Breast cancer is the most commonly diagnosed type of cancer in U.S. women, and is the second leading cause of death among women behind lung cancer.

Death rates from breast cancer have dropped by 36 percent since 1989, according to ACS. But black women's death rates from it have outpaced white women's, even though historically they have developed breast cancer less often. In 2012, African-American women's death rates from breast cancer were 42 percent higher than for white women.

ACS believes the disparity in death rates could be due to black women being diagnosed at later stages of the disease, to differences in the type of tumor, or to a lack of access to regular cancer screenings.

“Poverty, lower levels of educational attainment, and a lack of health insurance are also associated with lower breast cancer survival largely because of limited access to care,” the report said.

ACS says breast cancer death rates have declined between 2003 and 2012 among all racial and ethnic groups except for Native American women — by 1.8 percent per year among white women, by 1.5 percent annually among Latinas, by 1.4 percent per year among African-American women and by 1 percent among Asian-American women.

Lower rates of breast cancer among Asian-American and Hispanic women are thought to be related to decreased risk factors, including lower rates of obesity and alcohol consumption.

“The World Cancer Research Fund International estimates that one third of breast cancers could be prevented through healthy behaviors, including maintaining a healthy body weight, engaging in regular physical activity, and not drinking alcohol,” the report said, adding that evidence is growing that eating lots of fruits and vegetables may reduce the likelihood of getting hormone receptor-negative breast cancer.

January is Cervical Health Awareness Month

Computer-Assisted Technology Helps Beat Cervical Cancer

As recently as the 1940s, cervical cancer was a major cause of death among women in the United States. Fortunately, advancements in how physicians screen for cancerous and precancerous conditions of the cervix have some health practitioners hopeful that fatalities from cervical cancer, currently numbering over 4,000 annually, can be virtually eliminated within our lifetime.

A new computerized diagnostic tool designed to assist in the early detection of cancerous and precancerous cervical lesions called the DySIS™ Advanced Cervical Imaging System is now available in more than 50 US cities after undergoing extensive testing and review in Europe.

Endorsed by the UK National Institute of Health and Care Excellence, the FDA-cleared medical device is being praised by physicians for its ability to help identify abnormalities - and even cancers - on the cervix, which can sometimes escape detection during a standard colposcopy. Colposcopy is a diagnostic exam, usually following an abnormal Pap smear, in which a doctor applies a special solution to the cervix and peers into a binocular viewer called a colposcope to look for areas that turn white (acetowhitening), indicating abnormal cells and that a cervical biopsy may be needed.

"The DySIS system is a clinically proven 'smart colposcope' offering important advancements that improve the examination procedure for both doctors and patients," says Kim Stebbings, U.S. President of DySIS Medical, Inc.

One of those significant advancements is the imaging system that produces a DySISmap™, which is a color-coded image that looks like a weather map showing the precise areas of the cervix where acetowhitening is stronger and could contain abnormal cells.

The DySISmap sometimes highlights areas that are not easily visible using traditional methods. The physician includes the DySISmap information with other observations to help accurately select biopsy sites. Unlike most standard colposcopes, the DySIS colposcope also stores cervical images and the map electronically for easy comparison during future exams.

Stebbing says examinations performed using the DySIS System are reimbursed by insurers just like a standard exam, so there should be no additional cost to patients.

ABOUT DYSIS MEDICAL (www.dysismedical.com)

DySIS Medical is committed to saving lives through the early detection and diagnosis of disease using biophotonic innovations. The company's first product introduced to the market is the DySIS™ Advanced Cervical Imaging System, which assists clinicians with non-invasive, in vivo detection of cancerous and precancerous lesions of the cervix.

Planned Parenthood of Wisconsin Highlights Importance of Cervical Cancer Prevention, Early Detection

MADISON — According to recent Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) data, more than 12,000 people will be diagnosed with cervical cancer this year, and early detection can be lifesaving.

More than half of people diagnosed each year have not had a Pap test or have not been screened routinely.

January is Cervical Health Awareness Month, and Planned Parenthood of Wisconsin (PPWI) is encouraging people to start the year off right by taking charge of their health with important preventive screenings such as Pap tests, which detect irregularities that can lead to cervical cancer.

"Cervical health is important at all stages of life. Anybody with a cervix can develop cervical cancer, so Planned Parenthood encourages anyone age 21 and older to talk with their health care provider to see if they are due for a screening," said Meg Robertson, women's health nurse practitioner and director of clinical services at PPWI.

Cervical cancer is most often caused by certain types of the human papilloma virus (HPV), a very common sexually transmitted infection.

According to the CDC, approximately 79 million persons are currently infected with HPV, and 14 million persons are newly infected each year in the United States. T he HPV vaccine is one of the best ways to prevent the spread of HPV, which in turn can prevent cervical cancer.

The CDC has concluded that as many as 93 percent of cervical cancers could be prevented by screening and HPV vaccination. This is why medical organizations including the CDC, the American Cancer Society, the American Academy of Pediatrics and Planned Parenthood recommend that both girls and boys get the vaccination at age 11 or 12.

The vaccine works best if given before people become sexually active, but can benefit anyone, even if they have already been infected with HPV. The vaccine is available to those aged 9-26.

"Early detection and preventive measures like the HPV vaccine save lives," said Robertson. "At Planned Parenthood, we provide lifesaving cancer screenings, HPV vaccines and the education necessary to protect against cervical cancer and keep our patients safe, healthy and strong."

FRANCES CRESS WELSING SAVED MY LIFE

The psychiatrist, scholar and author—who died Jan. 2—was my therapist. She was also a warrior and conqueror for black people

By LELITA CANNON

I feel like I've lost my best friend of 10 years. A friend who knew everything about me, didn't judge or indict me, just assisted me and helped me absolve my guilt.

Frances Cress Welsing was a statuesque, beautiful, striking woman, always so composed. Dignified. And ready to listen to whatever problems I presented to her—new or old. My friend Yvonne broke the news of her death to me the morning of Jan. 2, and I was glad I didn't learn of it via social media. For at least the past two to three years, I have wondered what I would do if or when Dr. Welsing passed away. I would often think about bringing it up in one of our sessions, but it seemed gauche or rude to broach the topic of her mortality. Still, I couldn't help wondering what would happen when she died. Who, if anyone, would ever be able to take her place? This woman saved my life. To the best of my recollection, the catalyst for my beginning therapy was rooted in relationship issues I was experiencing with a man, or men, I was seeing at the time. But one day—I can't remember exactly which session it was—things just started pouring out of me, exorcising themselves. Things from my childhood. Things that were tormenting me. Things that I wanted erased from my memory like in Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind. She helped me at a time when I was suffering from severe depression and, apparently, post-traumatic stress disorder. A time when I felt that it would have been easier to die. I remember going to her multiple days one week because I felt my mind was leaving me. On countless occasions, I just wanted an escape from my own mind. I welcomed sleep and loathed waking; it induced my frantic pacing around my own house in a literal panic. Dr. Welsing engaged me in cognitive behavioral therapy. She unceasingly encouraged introspection and analysis of my own thoughts and actions to help me deal with the things that troubled me and by which I felt deeply afflicted and unsettled. She also promoted reflection on how white supremacist thinking affected the daily lives of people of color in general. I could tell that she wanted to foster a conversation between me and myself, really. When I didn't have her to hold my hand, so to speak, during those one- to two-hour sessions, she wanted to ensure that I made it to and through the next day. She wanted me to be definitively clear that I was valuable, no matter what. On Jan. 4 I phoned my uncle Moe, who had introduced me to Dr. Welsing through her writing—more specifically, her book, The Isis Papers. He knew why I was calling the minute he picked up, and we grieved in solidarity. When I finally felt lucid enough to call her answering service to inquire about a memorial service or funeral details, I had a breakdown over the phone, asking questions and providing my contact information between sobs. Yesterday I exited my car, situated myself to the east, said her name aloud and poured out some water for her. The past few days have been difficult, and I may have several more ahead. But one thing's for certain: The legacy of this regal gift from God is undeniable. The indelible imprint she has left on my life, and on the lives of others, is incomparable. It was undoubtedly one of her goals to help black people, and she succeeded. I remember sitting patiently, sometimes anxiously, in her waiting room, while she completed a session with another individual being guided through life's peaks and valleys by her wisdom. She was and remains a warrior and a conqueror for black people. She's simply passed over to the ancestral realm. I love you, Dr. Welsing. I will carry with me what you taught me. I will honor you. You will never be forgotten. *Lelita Cannon is a PSA specialist. She lives by the adage, "I ain't no killa, but don't push me." # Women's Health magazine bans body-shaming phrases from its covers

Article courtesy of the Huffington Post via “The Run-down”

For years, lifestyle publications - in particular, women's magazines - have dominated the media landscape.

Several of these periodicals encourage us to become healthier and happier with the help of new fitness routines - like taking frequent strolls outdoors for optimum health benefits.

However, many of these magazines have recently fallen under sharp criticism for what opponents call "body-shaming" language.

In fact, upon closer examination, you'll find that many women's magazines do display pretty intimidating phrases on their covers: "How to get the perfect bikini body" and "How to lose 10 pounds in one month," just to name a few.

Luckily, one well-known magazine is banning these phrases entirely - potentially changing the face of women's magazines forever.

In its new January/February issue, editor-in-chief Amy Keller Laird has vowed to draw readers in with more body-positive tag lines.

"Dear 'Bikini Body,'" she begins her open letter. "You imply that a body must be a certain size in order to wear a two-piece. Any body - every body - is a bikini body."

Black Women’s Organizations File U.S. Supreme Court Brief in Support of Abortion Rights in Texas

(Washington, DC) - Twelve Black women's Reproductive Justice organizations, led by In Our Own Voice: National Black Women's Reproductive Justice Agenda, filed an amicus brief in the U.S. Supreme Court case Whole Woman's Health, et al., v. Kirk Cole, Commissioner of the Texas Department of State Health Services, et al., highlighting the devastating impact of the clinic closures on Black women in Texas.

“Women’s clinics across the country provide critical health care for women,” said Marcela Howell, executive director of In Our Own Voice: National Black Women’s Reproductive Justice Agenda.

“Politicians who pass these types of laws do not care about the health and wellbeing of women. They are only interested in stopping access to abortions.”

“We hope that the U.S. Supreme Court will see right through this sham and uphold our constitutional right to access all reproductive health care services, including abortion care,” she added.

The amicus brief further details the devastating health outcomes Black women may experience as a result of the Texas clinic shutdown law. Prior to the enactment of HB2, there were more than 40 clinics providing reproductive health care, including abortion services.

Today, only 19 of these clinics remain. Because of these cuts “the reproductive health care of the more than 725,000 reproductive-aged Black women living in Texas” is in jeopardy.

Not only has the Texas clinic shutdown law added significant travel and longer waiting periods for women seeking abortion services, but it has also impacted access to other reproductive health services, such as family planning, prenatal care, maternal health care, and breast cancer screenings.

In Re: The marriage of MARIA KRAVTSOV, Petitioner and Respondent MAXIM KRAVTSOV

THE STATE OF WISCONSIN, TO THE PERSON NAMED ABOVE AS RESPONDENT
 You are notified that the petitioner named above has filed a Petition for divorce or legal separation against you.

You must respond with a written demand for a copy of the Petition within 40 days from the day after the first date of publication.

The demand must be sent or delivered to the court at: Clerk of Court Milwaukee County Courthouse 901 N. 9th St. ROOM 104 Milwaukee WI 53233and to MARIA KRAVTSOV 11101 W Kaul Ave Milwaukee WI 53225

It is recommended, but not required, that you have attorney help or represent you.

If you do not demand a copy of the Petition within 45 days, the court may grant judgment against you for the award of money or other legal action requested in the Petition and you may lose your right to object anything that is or may be incorrect in the Petition.

A judgment may be enforced as provided by law. A judgment awarding money may become a lien against any real estate you own now or in the future, and may also be enforced by garnishment or seizure of property.

You are further notified that if the parties to this action have minor children, violation of 948.31, Wis. Stats., (Interference with custody by parent or others) is punishable by fines and/or imprisonment.

If you and the petitioner have minor children, documents setting forth the percentage standard for child support established by the department under 49.22(9), Wis. Stats., and the factors that a court may consider for modification of that standard under 767.511(1m), Wis. Stats., are available upon your request from the Clerk of Court.

You are notified of the availability of information from the Circuit Court Commissioner as set forth in 767.105, Wis. Stats.

767.105 Information from Circuit Court Commissioner.

(2) Upon the request of a party to an action affecting the family, including a revision of judgment or order under sec. 767.59 or 767.451:

(a) The Circuit Court Commissioner shall, with or without charge provide the party with written information on the following, as appropriate to the action commenced:

1. The procedure for obtaining a judgment or order in the action.
 2. The major issues usually addressed in such an action.
 3. Community resources and family court counseling services available to assist the parties.

4. The procedure for setting modifying, and enforcing child support awards, or modifying and enforcing legal custody or physical placement judgments or orders.

(b) The Circuit Court Commissioner shall provide a party, for inspection or purchase with a copy of the statutory provisions in this chapter generally pertinent to the action.

“Black women already face systemic barriers to quality, affordable reproductive health care, this law just exacerbates that harm,” added Howell. “The law’s practical effect is barring Black women in Texas from exercising their legal right to an abortion.”

Joining In Our Own Voice in the amicus brief are 11 Black Women’s RJ organizations: The Afiya Center (TX), Access Reproductive Care-Southeast (GA), Black Women for Wellness (CA), Black Women’s Health Imperative (national), New Voices for Reproductive Justice (PA), SisterLove, Inc. (GA), SisterReach (TN), SisterSong – National Women of Color Reproductive Justice Collective (national), SPARK Reproductive Justice NOW! (GA), URGE – United for Reproductive and Gender Equity (national), and Women With a Vision (LA).

Background on the case:

The case challenges two provisions of the 2013 Texas law HB2, which threatens to reduce the number of clinics in Texas to fewer than ten, inflicting lasting harm on women in Texas.

The first provision requires all abortion providers to obtain local hospital admitting privileges, a medically unnecessary mandate that has already closed more than half of the clinics in the state. The second provision requires every reproductive health care facility offering abortion services to meet hospital-like building standards as an ambulatory surgical center (ASC), which can amount to millions of dollars in medically unnecessary building updates.

Case history: Whole Woman’s Health v. Cole (formerly Whole Woman’s Health v. Lakey)

Following a lawsuit brought by the Center for Reproductive rights on behalf of Whole Woman’s Health and several other Texas health care providers in April 2014, a federal district court blocked the the ambulatory surgical center requirement and the admitting-privileges requirement. On October 2, 2014, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit stayed that decision and allowed the law to immediately take effect. The majority of the clinics had to shut their doors.

However, on October 14, 2014, the U.S. Supreme Court reinstated the federal court injunction, allowing many of the previously closed clinics to reopen their doors while the state’s appeal moved forward. On June 9, 2015, the Fifth Circuit’s final decision once again upheld the state restrictions in substantial part, this time threatening to shutter all but 10 abortion providers in the state. Once again, the U.S. Supreme Court stepped in to block the Fifth Circuit’s decision and allow the clinics to remain open while the legal challenge continued.

The case is now before the U.S. Supreme Court.
