Janet Butler

Janet Butler knows first-hand that education opens doors to success, and she credits the love and support of family, and the encouragement of friends and former teachers for her success.

The graduate of Milwaukee Public School's James Madison High School, this first-generation college graduate is currently pursuing a doctorate degree in educational leadership at National Louis University. She has already received a bachelor science degree in political science from Tennessee State University; a Master's in education and public policy from Ashford University; a Master's in education in leadership and supervision from National Louis University, and a teacher certification in elementary education from UW-Milwaukee.

"I'm still fortunate enough to have my parents with me. They instilled values in me that helped me know that if I wanted to do something, I could do it. They encouraged me and continue to do so as I write my dissertation, and they are no doubt the key to my success," she said.

"I have three brothers and one sister—and they have all been supportive and encouraging as well. While I am the only one of five siblings that continued my education beyond high school, my entire family is very proud that the torch has been passed on to me. My parents had only a high school education, but they made sure that all five of us had the opportunity to continue our education if we chose to do so," she said.

Butler started her career in education in 1990 as a paraprofessional at Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Elementary School. She has taught at Sherman Multi-Cultural Arts School and returned back to Dr. King as an eighth grade teacher and now serves as the School Support Teacher at Dr. King Elementary School.

In her current role, Butler goes into the classroom to model, mentor and assist other educators to help them improve their teaching techniques. She also works with teachers in administering testing and helping them understand assessment data, so that their students can have more success with standardized testing.

Butler loves her job because she believes that it allows her to make a real difference in the lives of African American children.

Alice Pugh

Alice Pugh became an educator by happenstance. Her dad was an entrepreneur so she assumed she would one day follow his example.

As luck would have it though, while she was a senior at Washington High School, Pugh volunteered at a school, and fell in love with educating and working with youth.

She ended up attending the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee where she earned her Bachelor's in Business Administration, a degree in Special Education and later earned a Master's degree of Education from National Louis University in Administration and Supervision.

"As a senior in high school, I started volunteering at 38th Street School.

Alice Pugh

"I enjoyed it and eventually took a part-time job within Milwaukee Public School System (MPS) and I just never left. While I was at UW-Milwaukee, a very good counselor named Jim Johnstone pushed me to get a degree," she said.

"I began working in the classroom with students with special needs, particularly those with autism. I did that for a while, and then worked with students in an inclusive setting. I was bit by the education bug because it was so rewarding to see the difference that I could make in their lives," said Pugh.

A Milwaukee native, Pugh said that she was blessed to have both parents in a home, where strong family and Christian values were instilled in her early on. She is one of seven children, and all was well until her mother passed away when she was 12 years old.

"We had a traditional upbringing; it wasn't without struggles but we made it through. My parents stressed education and three other siblings and I went on to become college graduates. My mother's spirit lives in all of us.

She had such a joy and caring for others, and she instilled that in us. She also had a strong faith walk.

"It was difficult after she died, but my older sister, who was attending UW-Stout at the time, eventually left college and came home to help take care of the rest of us," she said.

Pugh has been employed by MPS for 32 years. She started as a paraprofessional and has been an educator for more than 28 years.

For the past four years, Pugh has been employed as a Special Education Supervisor for MPS, working out of the School Support Center and James Groppi High School.

She spends a large portion of her time supporting staff that work with all students and many special programs in MPS under the direction of Dare Boling, Manager of Non-Conventional Programs.

Pugh said that one of the more challenging aspects in the education arena today is that not enough people see the urgency to correct and address some of the needs of students and teachers in the system today.

In addition to her passion for education, Pugh finds time to get involved with the community.

"I see myself as a change agent. It's rewarding to be able to see young people succeed and exceed academically, and watch them continue their education beyond secondary education. Every year former students come back to visit on my birthday or during high school exam week. It's a great feeling when I hear about their academic accomplishments," she said.

Looking to the future Butler knows that there is no limit to where her education will take her, but her vision—while focused—is simple.

"I want to be a change agent. I want to make a difference, whether it is with the life of a child or an adult, even if all I can do is give them a smile to help make their lives brighter and better, or to encourage them," she said.

Alice Pugh

She is active in her church—Bradford Memorial AME, under Pastor Gerri Sheets-Howard—and engaged with the Building Strong Baby Campaign that works with teen moms and dads.

She is also involved with Amani United, a group that works to improve their neighborhood and our community at large. "It takes a village and even though I don't live in that neighborhood anymore, we can all still help."

"I started out working part-time during one summer at the Dominican Center on 24th and Locust, because I was interested in the work that they were doing and now I continue to work with them as a volunteer.

This summer we will work with the youth—helping them build boxcars from scratch. Many young men don't have opportunities to pick up tools and build things anymore, so we're exposing them to that," she said. Pugh has been a powerful force within her family and has inspired many to also step into the field of education, including Dr. Janice Pugh, Angela Harris and Nayo Young who are all currently employed within MPS.

Pugh married Terrance in 1983 and to that union had two wonderful children, Tirrell James and Jamila Olivia. She also has a grandson Jes'Zir.
