“A Message for My Sisters”

By Barbara Toles

“I am sharing my story with the hope that it motivates someone who has not gotten a mammogram, to go get one, and that it will be a source of comfort to a sister who may be going through it. You are not alone. How am I? I am taking it one day at a time with the knowledge that God is with me every step of the way.”--Toles

Barbara Toles

My message is simple. Listen to your body, it will tell you when something is wrong. October is the month that has been designated Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

It is the month where you see special emphasis placed on the need for women to do breast exams and to make sure they have annual mammograms.

You literally see a sea of pink during many events that are raising awareness and funds this month. Pink ribbons have been the norm, but now you see pink wristbands, gloves, sideline caps, and yes..., even pink cleats all being worn by NFL football players to raise awareness.

I think this is a beautiful thing, however, women (and men) need to be conscious of this disease the other eleven months out of the year as well.

For women who are battling with breast cancer and those who have already fought it, October is the month that others pay more attention to it. We live with it daily.

Yes, I did say we. Ironically, on October 23rd of last year I was at home watching TV when out of nowhere two sharp pains went through my left breast. I immediately took off my shirt and bra to examine my breast.

To my dismay I quickly found the source of the pain, a small lump. I knew I had to have it checked out right away. It was Friday night and the earliest I could call my primary doctor was Monday morning. In the meantime,

I had to stay calm and try to prevent myself from imagining the worst, that being the possibility that it was cancer. On Monday morning at 8:00, I called my doctor's office, told them what I found, and asked for an appointment.

They gave me an appointment for 3 p.m. that day. When I saw my doctor, he felt the lump and ordered an ultrasound which was followed by a biopsy which confirmed my deepest fear, that I had breast cancer.

I had surgery in December followed by 33 days of radiation that began on February 2 and ended March 18. I felt good during radiation and did not experience the fatigue that often accompanies it.

Upon completion of radiation I thought I was fine and was extremely grateful that I did not have to go through chemotherapy especially after all the horrifying stories I had heard about chemo.

My medical oncologist got me started on anastrozole, one of the pills you take for 5-10 years depending on your cancer after radiation. I took that for two months, and then went in to have my two month follow up appointment with my radiation oncologist.

He examined me and thought he felt something under my arm. He said let's check it out to be on the safe side. I then had another biopsy done and was informed that there was some cancer in one of my lymph nodes.

A feeling of sadness and anger came over me. I was angry because I couldn't help but think my breast surgeon did not get it all, versus it came back in that short period of time. In the weeks that followed, I met with my breast surgeon and medical oncologist to determine how we were going to proceed. I was scheduled for surgery followed by chemo. However, I told my medical oncologist that I wanted to seek a second opinion before I began any chemo treatment. I did, and discovered I was more comfortable with that doctor than I was with my original one, so I changed doctors. My advice to anyone who may not be totally happy or comfortable with their doctor is simple: Get another one! Don't be afraid to ask for a second opinion and/or make a change if necessary.

The treatment plan I am currently on includes chemo to shrink the tumor, followed by surgery and radiation again. Right now I am halfway through chemo and feeling like I just want this process to be over. My first chemo drug has caused neuropathy in my fingertips and toes which causes them to hurt, and fatigue that has robbed me of my energy. When asked how I am doing, my answer is: “I'm okay.” For me this is a lonely journey despite the people who offer their help. I am grateful to them, especially Sisters4Cure, an organization of women (founded by Phyllis Holder) who have survived breast cancer and volunteer their time to support, encourage, and educate others affected by breast cancer. They lift my spirit when I find myself feeling down and a little sad about this life changing disease.

I am sharing my story with the hope that it motivates someone who has not gotten a mammogram, to go get one, and that it will be a source of comfort to a sister who may be going through it. You are not alone. How am I? I am taking it one day at a time with the knowledge that God is with me every step of the way.

About Sisters4Cure...

Sisters4Cure is a volunteer nonprofit organization of breast cancer survivors who know that thriving is better than merely surviving. Members of this organization are passionate, purpose driven volunteers who give time, talent and treasure because we believe that we lived to help others live.

The organization is committed to offering cross generational, cross cultural evidenced-based strategies, support and information to improve self care skills, quality of life and mindfulness practices of people affected by life threatening chronic diseases, in particular breast cancer and depression.

Breast cancer kills more Black women than white women, study shows

By Nicole Lyn Pesce

Black women are much more likely to die from breast cancer than white women, according to a dire new report.

Researchers at Sinai Urban Health Institute working with the Breast Cancer Research Foundation studied breast cancer death rates in the 50 largest U.S. cities between 2010 and 2014.

They found African American women were 43% more likely to die than their Caucasian counterparts, as reported in the journal Cancer Epidemiology.

And the racial mortality gap is widening in 24 of these cities. Atlanta was home to the highest disparity in survivors, with black women 117% more likely to die from breast cancer over white ones.

The odds were also heavily skewed against black women in Austin, Texas; Wichita, Kansas; San Antonio, Texas; and Kansas City, Missouri.

There is some good news: Memphis, Philadelphia and Boston showed much more level survival rates between races.

“We were surprised that the disparity in Black:White breast cancer mortality rates has continued to grow in the U.S. and in the majority of cities studied,” co-author Bijou Hunt from the Sinai Urban Health Institute told the Daily News.

“We are encouraged by the progress made in Memphis, Philadelphia and Boston, but this data reveals that there is still more work to be done.”

Breast cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death among women in this country, and some 40,450 are expected to succumb to the disease in 2016 alone.

This Avon Foundation-funded study didn't look for why black women have a much bleaker prognosis, however.

“Several factors could be at work such as lack of access to early detection screenings, treatment, advocates, insurance,” said Dr. Marc S. Hurlbert of the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, who is calling for more research to understand the disparity.

If a black woman can't detect breast cancer early enough, she faces more serious late-stage diagnosis and delayed treatment.

And if she's the breadwinner in her family, she struggles with how taking time off for doctor appointments and debilitating chemo and radiation treatments will interfere with work and how she cares for her family.

“My hope is that these findings serve as a wake-up call for our country,” said Cheryl Heinonen, Avon Foundation President.

“We must do better to ensure that every woman — regardless of race or her ability to pay — has access to the care and quality of life that she deserves.”

Black Women Now the Most Educated Group in US

“BY ANGELA BRONNER HELM, Courtesy of TheRoot.com Posted: June 5, 2016

Good news, bad news. A new report confirms that black women are now the most educated group in the United States. But we still have a long way to go for pay equity.

According to the National Center for Education Statistics, between 2009 and 2010, Black women earned 68 percent of all associate degrees awarded to Black students, as well as 66 percent of bachelor’s degrees, 71 percent of master’s degrees and 65 percent of all doctorates awarded to Black students.

The report also says that the percentage of U.S. college students who are Black increased from 10 to 15 percent from 1976 to 2012, while the percentage of white students among all U.S. college students fell from 84 to 60 percent.

By both race and gender, a higher percentage of black women (9.7 percent) are enrolled in college than any other group, topping Asian women (8.7 percent), white women (7.1 percent) and white men (6.1 percent).

Unfortunately, while black women may be the most highly educated, a recent study found that Black women make up just 8 percent of private sector jobs and less than 2 percent of leadership roles.

And as of 2013, black women earned just 64 cents to the white man’s dollar, while white women earned 78 cents, Black men 75 cents, Hispanic men 67 cents and Hispanic women 54 cents.

The National Committee on Pay Equity’s research predicts that white women won’t receive equal pay until 2059—and they are ahead of Black and Hispanic men and women. So where does that leave us?
