12-year-old learns a little Magic goes a long way!

Twelve-year-old seventh grader Grant Martin is glad his dad took him to hear NBA hall of famer and millionaire businessman Magic Johnson instead of the playoff game between the Milwaukee Bucks and Toronto Raptors at the BMO Harris Bradley Center Saturday. When Johnson heard about Martin wanting to be at the game instead of hearing him talk about his journey from basketball to business success, Johnson called the young man to the front of the stage when he got up to ask a question and handed him $200 dollars! The Bucks lost, but Martin was the real winner! Brewers' Eric Thames the hottest hitter in the game!

Milwaukee Brewers first baseman Eric Thames (shown inset at right and above) during Wednesday's game between his team and the Cincinnati Reds, is the hottest hitter in baseball and the subject of our Pulse question this week! Thames leads the majors with 11 home runs. According to one news report, if he were to continue his torrid pace for the rest of this season, he would finish with 81 homers! He left the Wednesday game with tightness in his left hamstring. According to ESPN.com, Brewers Manager Craig Counsell said it's "not a big deal."--Game photo by Yvonne Kemp

New fair housing report reveals rise in hate crimes

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

A new report released recently by the national organization that monitors housing discrimination reveals not only does segregation in housing persists, there has been an increase in housing-related hate activity.

In its 2017 Fair Housing Trends Report: "The Case for Fair Housing," the National Fair Housing Alliance (NFHA) notes since the fall of 2016, there has been an uptick of hate crimes involving people who were harassed in their neighborhoods or at their apartments, university dormitories, or homes.

"These instances are sometimes reported to local law enforcement but should also be reported to local fair housing centers and NFHA," stressed Shanna Smith, president and CEO of NFHA. "Because we will push to ensure that people who harass or intimidate are held accountable for violating the Fair Housing Act," Smith concluded.

The report documents that 70% of housing discrimination claims are handled by local, private fair housing centers. There were 28,181 complaints of housing discrimination in 2016.

Though the report focused mostly on Black/White segregation, more than half of the complaints involved discrimination based on disability, followed by nearly 20% based on racial discrimination and 8.5 percent based on discrimination against families with kids.

The NFHA also notes that disability is often easier to detect than other types

An Important Voice

Dr. Roland Pattillo's work led to Henrietta Lacks' "immortality"

Without Roland Anthony Pattillo, the story of Henrietta Lacks may never have been told.

Dr. Pattillo grew up in Louisiana in the 1930s in an entrenched culture of segregation, yet he nurtured the improbable dream to young men of color in the Deep South at that time of one day becoming a doctor.

Despite the odds, however, young Roland earned his medical degree from the Saint Louis University School of Medicine in 1959 and embarked upon the career he had dreamed about since childhood.

After medical school, Dr. Pattillo completed his fellowship training at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine and Harvard Medical School. At Johns Hopkins, Dr. Pattillo trained with George Gey, MD, who in 1951 cultured the first immortalized cell line from a tissue sample biopsied during the treatment of Henrietta Lacks, a cervical cancer patient -- although the culture was created without her permission. This story is chronicled in the best-selling book and recent film, The Immortal Life of Henrietta Lacks.

"As a physician-scientist, Dr. Pattillo led the team responsible for developing a new cell line from cervical tissue that was used to develop a vaccine for the Human Papilloma Virus, which is routinely used to prevent the cervical cancer that claimed the life of Henrietta Lacks."

The immortal cells -- the oldest and most commonly used human cell line (known as HeLa cells), have contributed to invaluable scientific progress in many fields, notably testing the first polio vaccine in the 1950s to expedite its readiness for human clinical trials.

As a physician-scientist, Dr. Pattillo led the team responsible for developing a new cell line from cervical tissue that was used to develop a vaccine for the Human Papilloma Virus, which is routinely used to prevent the cervical cancer that claimed the life of Henrietta Lacks.

Beyond the clinic and the laboratory, Dr. Pattillo befriended the Lacks family when he learned that they were unaware of the important scientific advances being made using HeLa cells.

Due to his close interactions with the family, their questions and grief remained with him over the decades and continued to play a part in his 35-year career at MCW and 20-year career at Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta.

Underscoring his relationship with the Lacks family was Dr. Pattillo's gift of the headstone that now adorns Henrietta's previously unmarked grave.

He also works as a liaison between the Lacks family and the scientific and journalistic communities, including, most notably, Rebecca Skloot, the author of The Immortal Life of Henrietta Lacks.

In addition, Dr. Pattillo has honored Henrietta's

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:
"What do you think of the Brewers first baseman Eric Thames and his hitting performance so far?"

In an effort to "build a great metropolitan area," city officials discuss importance of JobLines

It's a bus line that's more than just transportation -- rather it's a route to success and opportunities. For some the journey is coming with some challenges, so leaders from area counties are coming together to make sure the program and communities thrive.

Stakeholders sat down to talk about the importance of city to suburban public transportation during a meeting about the importance of the ability to travel Saturday, April 22.

"We need to reach people in the city and make sure they have opportunities to access to where jobs are," said Milwaukee Alderman Cavalier Johnson.

The implementation of JobLines, added routes on the Milwaukee County Transit System, will connect riders to schools and jobs in Waukesha, Ozaukee and Washington Counties.

"It's our responsibility to build a great metropolitan area," said Chairman Paul Decker, Waukesha County Board of Supervisors.

Elected officials and community leaders from the four counties along with residents gathered to brainstorm on ways for continued success.

"JobLines are very vital. In Milwaukee, in certain neighborhoods we have a very high rate of unemployment," said Johnson.

Johnson added raising awareness and ridership is key, so next year when funding ends the routes should become permanent lines.

"This more than a JobLine, this is a lifeline. A lifeline for folks who need access to the city and family-supporting jobs," Johnson said.

Legendary nightclub owner Arlis Jones Passes

Arlis Reed Jones (AKA "Daddy-O"), one of Milwaukee's most treasured entertainment icons and legends, died Tuesday after a lengthy illness.

For over 40 years, Jones owned and/or operated 12 of the most pre-eminent nightclubs in Milwaukee, such as ARJ's, Savoy's, Blue and Frosty's, Brief Reflections, Reflections, Alexandria's, Bradley's, ARJ's Panache, and Mr. J's Jazz and Blues Lounge to name a few.

Jones' establishments were entertainment meccas that provided live music performances and Deejay record spinning of jazz, blues, R&B and Old School musical genres for adults 30 years and older.

Offering his condolences to his friends, his family and the extended family that worked as staff members at his many establishments over the years, Milwaukee Common Council President Ashanti Hamilton praised Jones for working tirelessly to keep Milwaukee vibrant as a scene for African American arts and culture. "His passion for his work was exceeded only by his professionalism," Hamilton said in a statement.

One of Jones' clubs, ARJ's on Villard, was located in Hamilton's first district. "It was a true asset for the neighborhood," the alderman recalled. "Jones prided himself on his stellar record as a top-notch businessman, and it was always a pleasure to work with him."

"Our city was richer for having Arlis Jones in it, and his passing is a loss for all of us."

The family and staff of Mr. J's is asking Jones' admirers and the community to keep them in your prayers and respect their wish for privacy during this time of grief. Condolences, concerns and comments can be expressed online at mrjsjazzandblues.com.

Further information regarding services are forthcoming.

PERSPECTIVES

MCJ EDITORIAL

Unless unemployed are linked to jobs, Joblines transit initiative is just a sight-seeing venture.

There's little doubt that programs like JobLines are important pieces of an employment puzzle for Black Milwaukee. But by itself, JobLines is far from a real solution to a program that undermines the culture of Milwaukee and our acknowledged status as "the worst place for Black Americans in the country."

Milwaukee leads, or is in the top five, national negative social indicators, including Black infant mortality, lowest percentage of Black fourth and eighth grade reading proficiency rate, segregation and poverty, which actually increased under President Barack Obama. (Oops, we were not supposed to mention that fact).

Most of those negative social indicators can be linked to Milwaukee's nation leading Black male unemployment rate, which has stubbornly stayed at over 55% for the last decade according to irrefutable research from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Interestingly, while the city of Milwaukee has lost over 70,000 manufacturing jobs in the last 25 years, the suburbs have seen rapid increases in technology, light industry and factory positions. That's why programs like JobLines (detailed on page one) are so important. But as we mentioned, by itself, JobLines and similar programs will do little to significantly lower the abysmal Black male unemployment rate.

As freshman Alderman Cavalier Johnson noted in our article, without linking the unemployed to jobs, the transportation is nothing more than a site seeing venture.

That point was made abundantly clear when the county dropped one of three bus routes to the suburbs that were created as a result of a lawsuit filed by the Black Health Coalition of Wisconsin and MICAH against the state Department of Transportation. The routes originate in the heart of the central city and travel to the suburbs, where there is an abundance of jobs.

One of the routes has already been dropped because of low ridership. In other words, there was not a pot of gold at the end of the bus ride. Which doesn't mean there were no jobs (research shows there is). But the riders didn't know where they were.

The Community Journal and the Black Research Organization has been doing research over the last few months and we've discovered hundreds of suburban jobs, many of which are posted along highways 145, 45 and 41. You can also find dozens of signs on buildings off the main arteries. And suburban newspapers are full of jobs openings.

But that doesn't help most Black job seekers who don't subscribe to those papers, or have transportation to drive up and down the streets in Hartford, Germantown or New Berlin.

And the county buses don't take them directly to those jobs. For example, one bus route scheduled as a result of the Black Health Coalition lawsuit, starts at Center Street and runs the entire length of Appleton Avenue to Mequon Road in Germantown. But the industrial park is five miles away from where the bus begins its return southward. Try walking that far for an interview in January. And that's if you know where you're going.

Johnson is right, as was Mayor Tom Barrett several weeks ago when he said on Black Nouveau that the problem is linking the unemployed to the jobs. And, we should add, advertising them as well.

Unless a coordinated effort is made to address those two areas (not to mention training young black men for specific jobs), you may as well rename the program simply 'Lines.'

Why you should not get mad at Millennials

To the brothers and sisters who are frustrated by the direction our Millennials are taking (without regard to our history, bumpy roads or the Africentric foundation we stood upon) I have a message for you: Don't get mad, for we hold some responsibility for their ignorance and cultural impotence.

And even if you want to blame "the system" or "the man," it was still our ordained responsibility to re-educate, to provide our descendants a moral compass and cultural footing.

That being the case, don't get irritated by the insanity that defines our community, but instead recognize too many of our young emerging leaders (much less the masses) don't know, can't relate and don't have the spiritual platform to fall back on.

As Brother Malcolm once said, they have been bamboozled, duped, led astray, or simply brainwashed to accept that HIS-story and prejudices are true: that we are morally bankrupt, uncivilized and lazy. If HIS STORY is true, that Black people deserve to be where we are and should accept our fate. Some of them justify our situation because the Bible supports slavery and God ordained us to be who we are and where we're stuck.

But, you and I know the lunacy of that assessment. We have fought too long and hard; were often detoured, pushed down and spat upon. But still we rise (or is that rose) and were strengthened by the ordeal. Little do our Millennials know how resilient we are. At least until this generation.

Obviously, something happened, the civil rights train was derailed. We handed over the keys as they boarded the back of the bus, with weaves flying in the air, pants sagging down around their ankles, unable to hear the cry to continue the revolution because their ears were covered with $200 Beats headphones they couldn't afford, listening to Snoop Doggy Dud telling them to call their sisters bitches, to relax and smoke a joint and turn off "The Underground" because that history was "boring" and a misrepresentation (apparently we were happy go lucky slaves).

So why get mad at them?

They are the victims and we must take some responsibility for not educating them. Did you really think those who benefited from our oppression would educate them? That the political parties would empower them. That having Uncle Sam replace a working father in the home was a positive development, the natural evolution?

So, don't be mad or frustrated brother, hold your breath while I spread some gospel from the "Book of Osei":

...They don't know what it feels like to be told you have to sit at the back of the bus; to be denied the right—as taxpayers, citizens, God's children—to sit on any available seat on "public" transportation. They simply can't relate.

...They don't know "who" and who made us drink from a "colored" water fountain, and "why" that water tastes different.

...They have never been denied a seat at the lunch counter, forced to walk

Becoming an Agent of Change

When a person becomes an agent of change, they begin working towards making a difference. They begin addressing the negative, while remaining positive. They become someone who no longer ignores the life struggles that keep them and their people at the bottom.

The agent of change must keep out and away from getting into personal trouble. An agent of change must be that special someone who make changes in their own life. They must be willing to sacrifice for what's known to be right in order to better their life and help others in theirs.

The change agent must, at all times, keep it real. There's nothing worse than someone that is trusted in our community, who turns out to be a fraud. Now, don't get me wrong, everyone makes mistakes but please note, that mistakes are not done on purpose or by accident. Mistakes are made when you are trying to do something right, not from ignorance, poor decisions or recklessness.

Being an agent of change places you in a position that in which you must still be cautious. You become a topic of every discussion, being praised and ridiculed. A change agent must protect themselves and make sure their decisions are based on what's best for constant growth. An agent must be prepared to do reality checks, so that false hope and tainted fantasies can be recognized then erased. This must happen all while remembering that many become dependent on the change agents to be models of what they can become. They also become dependent on that one person who can get certain things done that no one else can seem to do. So again, change agents must be extra careful.

In Milwaukee, we have many that claim to be these agents of change with strategies of someone that has never led or they're just outdated. Our agenda needs to keep us pushing forward and moving up. Agents of change must refrain from becoming just another poverty pimp. An agent of change must always renew their community commitments and support room for improvement. The job as an agent of change has no room for those that love to quit.

When a person becomes an agent of change they work towards betterment. This is a lifetime position of being that someone in search for peace. Remember this.

Millennials Are Not in Favor of Planned Parenthood

Planned Parenthood is a nonprofit organization that provides reproductive health care in the United States and globally. Planned parenthood delivers health care, sex education, and information to millions of women, men, and young people worldwide.

There is a wide range of pro-choice advocates. These advocates believe that women should have the choice to either keep or abort their child. While there is a large amount of advocates for pro-choice, there are many individuals who are more in favor of pro-life. Let's say, millennials for example.

Studies show that over 50% of millennials believe abortion should be illegal in some if not all states. Millennials are against the killing of unborn children. Believing that all things should have a chance at life, even if adoption becomes a final resort, millennials are more likely to be in favor of life.

Older generations are typically pro-choice. They believe that women shouldn't give birth if the woman is financially unstable, too young, unprepared or possibly a victim of rape or if the woman simply doesn't want a child.

Younger generations are more recreational and community oriented and believe that the circumstances of the mother and their fears, worries, or personal issues (other than severe health issues) should not be the center of a woman's decision to abort what women were naturally born to do, give life.

After conducting a little research, I ran across an interesting video that had a very strong and admirable message to it. The video was created by Kristan Hawkins, head of the largest millennial pro-life organization in the United States.

In the video Kristan makes a statement directed to Republicans. The overall message was that they [Republicans] are expected to keep their promise to defund planned parenthood no matter how they have to do it. The video is over a month old, but the message and morals that it was built upon are still valuable to millennials who are pro-life.

In the video Kristan states that the election wasn't easy but millennials still have a lot of questions about the plan for the nation's future. She also shares that the majority of us, millennials, agree that abortion is wrong and that taxpayers should never be forced to fund the killing of innocent human life.

Planned Parenthood is the nation's largest abortion vendor. When it comes to the decision between pro-life or pro-choice it is understandable that women go through things; unexpected pregnancy, teenage pregnancy, victims of rape, financial instability and many more things that deter women from actually giving life.

According to US.abortionclock.org, since 1970 Planned Parenthood has contributed to 7,711,648.9 abortions in the U.S (and counting). Simultaneously, while women are having life taken away from unborn, unspoken for

The grand O. J. Hooker, at 102, remains one for the ages

By Richard G. Carter

"Nature so arranges it, that clouds are like rainbows and all the world is like a cradle..." James Anderson, "Five" (1951)

On April 4, 1968, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.-- whom I was privileged to interview here in 1964 for the old Milwaukee Star -- was killed at 39. On April 4, 1992, my mother, Juanita Carter -- first paid secretary of the Milwaukee NAACP -- passed away at 79 of natural causes.

To this day, I remain overwhelmed by the uncanny coincidence that my hero, Dr. King, and my revered mother, died 24 years apart on the very same date in April.

Mrs. Carter -- a proud, Black American woman -- was the best mother possible. In the long, hot summer of 1967, she just escaped the bombing of the NAACP office. She also spent many election days and nights working at polling places and helped her night-working husband, Sanford Carter, succeed in business.

In 2017, Olivia J. Hooker, of White Plains, NY, turned 102. In the Spring of 1921, at age 6, she survived America's most horrendous, anti-Black race riots, in Tulsa, Okla.

In 1986 -- before joining my hometown Milwaukee Journal -- I interviewed this very special woman, then 71, in her home. I did likewise for the New York Amsterdam News in 2011 when she was 96 -- and remember both like yesterday.

"I haven't forgotten any of it," she told me, referring to the bias displayed by White police in Tulsa under the guise of trying to 'protect' Black people in that city's "Black Wall Street." She added: "You don't protect someone by shooting them with bullets."

When we first met, I was a freelance writer on the lookout for a good story. What I hoped was to find a strong, accomplished Black woman -- someone like my mother.

Happily, I discovered the accomplished, industrious Hooker. Affectionately known in those days as O.J., I felt she was perfect for a profile in Suburban People -- the Sunday magazine of Gannett Westchester Newspapers, headquartered in White Plains.

I was overwhelmed by her achievements as we talked -- including what, for me, was especially outstanding: As a military history buff, I learned that Hooker was the first Black enlisted woman to go on active duty with the U.S. Coast Guard in World War II.

Following is part of what I wrote about her in March 1986 -- excluding the Tulsa race riots. Regarding her nickname, it should be noted this was eight years prior to O.J. Simpson's infamous, nationally televised murder trial:

"While she doesn't run through airports like another famous 'O.J.' Olivia J. Hooker, 71, moves almost as fast, although officially retired from two jobs. "O.J. Hooker, of White Plains, is a clinical psychologist. She called it a

Documentary on Milwaukee zip code 53206 to be screened at Calvary Baptist Church April 29

A screening of the documentary MILWAUKEE 53206 will be shown at Calvary Baptist Church, through its Community Outreach Ministry.

The screening will be Saturday, April 29, at 12 noon at Calvary, 2959 N. Teutonia Ave.

The documentary, by Keith McQuirter, tells the story of those affected by mass incarceration in America's most incarcerated ZIP code. Through the powerful journeys of Beverly Walker, Dennis Walton and Chad Wilson we witness how incarceration shapes their lives, families and community.

These intimate stories reveal how a community fights to move forward even as a majority of its young men end up in prison. The film examines how decades of poverty, unemployment, and a lack of opportunity has contributed to the crisis of mass incarceration communities across the nation.

After the viewing, a panel discussion and Q&A will be held.

To RSVP, call the church office, 414-372-1450.

Report: Anti-Semitic incidents in U.S. up 86 percent in 2017

Article courtesy of the Daily Mail via "The Rundown"

Anti-Semitic incidents in the United States, including vandalism and assaults, increased 86 percent in the first quarter of 2017, the Anti-Defamation League revealed Monday.

The civil rights organization said its audit indicated that 541 incidents -- including vandalism, harassment and assaults -- occurred in the first quarter of the year, a 34 percent increase over 2015, which had a total of 1,266 incidents.

Nearly 30 percent of 2016's incidents occurred in November and December, and the audit included 161 bomb threats against Jewish community centers and other institutions.

The heightened political atmosphere of the 2016 presidential election was involved in the increase in incidents in late 2016, the ADL report said.

The organization said it could directly link 34 incidents to the election. In one incidences of vandalism, graffiti in Denver read

"Kill the Jews, Vote Trump."

The ADL said that though the number of anti-Semitic incidents on college campuses did not rise, they increased by 106 percent at non-Jewish elementary, middle and high schools nationwide.

Millennials Are Not in Favor of Planned Parenthood

humans, the CDC reports that 6.1 million couples cannot conceive on their own, or at all.

In an attempt to win over the votes of millennials for pro-choice, political advocates of Planned Parenthood began a $30 million effort to encourage voters to choose pro-choice. In the meantime, Ms. Hawkins and the voices of many millennials across the nation still stand their ground.

"We expect you [Republicans] to stand up to their lobbyists, which are all federally funded from Planned Parenthood. In every bill and redirect those funds to thousands of federally qualified community health care clinics that do so much more across our nation. Don't betray us. Keep your promise." --Kristan Hawkins

More than 90 percent of all housing discrimination occurred during rental transactions, even though renters are often in greater need of affordable housing than homeowners.

There is an increased need for HUD and other government agencies to expediently process cases and aggressively enforce the Fair Housing Act.

There is also a need for increased support of fair housing initiatives by the philanthropic community.

The trends report also highlights the emerging battle to combat fair housing violations on shared housing and social media platforms.

Companies like Airbnb and Facebook have proactively made changes to their sites in an effort to comply with fair housing laws, but there are continued concerns about the potential for discrimination on similar platforms.

Facebook worked with NFHA and other leading civil rights organizations in an effort to prevent individuals from utilizing its platform to place discriminatory ads.

The report includes key recommendations for eliminating housing discrimination, strengthening fair housing enforcement, and expanding access to opportunity.

The report did not include any statistical breakdown on housing segregation or discrimination by state and/or city, including Wisconsin and—most notably—Milwaukee.

career in 1983 after 22 years as director and associate administrator at the Kennedy Child Studies Center in New York, where she worked to foster the proper learning environment for children who might be considered troubled or learning disabled. In May, she also concluded 20 years' service as a professor of clinical psychology at Fordham University.

"O.J. says her greatest challenge these days is finding enough time to do all the things she'd like to do. 'Life hasn't changed all that much for me,' she says. 'I still stay active and try to be part of what's going on.'

"In addition to taking weekly lessons in tai chi, a Chinese form of exercise that makes the body more supple and improves balance, O.J. spends two days a week working at the Westchester County Medical Center in Valhalla, NY, counseling children with physical or emotional disabilities, and their parents.

"One day she works in her Fordham office as professor emeritus of clinical psychology, reading graduate theses and meeting with the faculty. One morning she works on memberships at the White Plains-Greenburgh chapter of the NAACP.

"The rest of the time she carries out her responsibilities as chairperson of the administrative board of Trinity United Methodist Church in White Plains. Retirement?"

"Her distinguished career also includes her years as a psychologist at the Bedford Hills Correctional Facility and service on the board of the Terence Cardinal Cooke Health Care Center (formerly Flower Fifth Avenue Hospital) in New York.

"If she had the luxury of channeling all her energies in only three directions, O.J. says, she'd try to secure more college scholarships for Black children, seek more vigorous prosecution for drug abusers and try to convince people of the importance of their votes.

"As far as I'm concerned, these are some of the burning issues of our time," she says, "and if I had another six hours in every day, I'd make sure I was out there doing my bit to see somebody was paying enough attention to them."

"If Olivia J. Hooker had another six hours in every day to get involved, it's probably safe to say we'd all be a lot better off," I concluded.

Today, at the ripe old age of 102, O.J. Hooker has lived a long, productive, extraordinary life. And her story remains one for the ages. When I think of her these days, I also find myself thinking of my own mother -- both of whom survived tragic racial conflagrations.

Finally, who could be more meaningful to us than a strong, incredibly accomplished Black woman who has joyfully passed the century mark -- and keeps on keeping on.

Y&E YOUTH & EDUCATION

Riverside alum hopes his passion for teaching inspires new educators

By Kathy Quirk

An alumnus of Riverside University High School and UWM, Nate Deans now teaches English at his high-school alma mater.

Sometimes when he walks into a classroom for the first time, Nate Deans sees the surprise in his students' eyes.

"I may be the first African-American male teacher they have ever seen."

Deans, a 2010 alumnus of the School of Education at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, teaches English at Riverside University High School. However, he believes his work goes beyond teaching. "I try to be a motivator, an inspirer and set an example for my students."

A Riverside graduate himself, Deans says that he feels a special responsibility to students of color who make up the majority of students in Milwaukee Public Schools. "Primarily all my students that I teach are people of color."

Deans was inspired to become a teacher by his grandmother, a teacher and the author of one novel. "My grandmother was always a motivator. She was the first person who started me thinking about college."

While many teachers play a role in their students' lives, it's especially important for African-American students, and particularly the male students, to see African-American male professionals in their classrooms, says Dean.

"I'm someone they can talk to about their lives because I've been through similar experiences growing up in Milwaukee. I've been in their situations."

In the classroom, Deans encourages his students to draw connections between their experiences and the books they are reading.

For example, in a lesson on "Farewell to Manzanar," about a Japanese family's life before, during and after imprisonment in a World War II internment camp, he asks students to think about parallels with their own lives.

He reads a passage where one of the authors, Jeanne Wakatsuki Houston, talks about how the simple loss of family mealtimes in the camp contributed to the breakdown of the family.

Deans encourages his students to talk about how similar breakdowns in rituals can erode the lives of their families.

He often brings his students to UWM for cultural events and activities, which gets them thinking about the possibility of attending college.

"I felt UWM did and does a really good job with urban education. It gives students a practical sense of what stepping into an urban high school is like."

Through UWM, he met one of his own mentors, Reuben Harpole Jr., a longtime educator and activist in Milwaukee. Deans was proud to receive the Reuben K. Harpole Jr. scholarship while at UWM.

"He is phenomenal," says Deans of Harpole. "No one becomes successful on their own. There's always been someone before you on the path. His scholarships are crucial in motivating students."

Dean's wife Nyida is also a teacher, and provides ongoing support and encouragement. "Teaching is rewarding - some days it's challenging - but overall it's rewarding." The Deans have three young daughters, Nyla, Nakayla and Nora.

His children and his students motivate him, Deans says. "Teaching gives me the opportunity to look at Milwaukee and see hope and change. People of color who care for these kids and see them as people and not statistics are needed in our schools."

Associated Bank to Host Annual "Bank Your Future" Educational Event

Milwaukee-area professionals team-up to help high school students prepare for their future

Associated Bank — in collaboration with Boys and Girls Clubs of Greater Milwaukee, YMCA of Metropolitan Milwaukee, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, and National Association for African-Americans in Human Resources (NAAHR) — will host the fourth annual Bank Your Future program Saturday, April 29 in the east ballroom in UW-Milwaukee's Student Union, 2200 E. Kenwood Blvd.

The event starts at 12:30 p.m., and is an attempt to bridge the educational gap and ensure that all youth, regardless of income, have the opportunity to envision and pursue their best possible future.

More than 100 high school seniors will attend the event to prepare for their future with financial literacy, interviewing and college readiness skills.

During the event a panel of college students will share their experience and insights to help the high school students take the next step in their educational journey.

Milwaukee's Rookie of the Year front runner Malcom Brogdon will wrap-up the event with a brief discussion and distribute raffle prizes.

Survey: Gender pay gap starts with college majors

Article courtesy of "The Rundown"

The well-documented gender pay gap can be blamed, at least partially, on what men and women choose to study in college, according to a report from Glassdoor. Men and women tend to cluster into different fields in college, and those choices, by career path, put male graduates on a path for higher career earnings potential than female graduates, according to the company's study.

Glassdoor studied data from more than 46,900 resumes to demonstrate how men and women sort into different college majors and how that translates into gender gaps in careers and pay later.

The study found that many majors that lead to high-paying careers in tech and engineering are male-dominated, while majors that lead to lower paying careers in social sciences and liberal arts are female-dominated.

Among the findings:
--The most male-dominated majors are mechanical engineering (89 percent male), civil engineering (83 percent male), physics (81 percent male), computer science and engineering (74 percent male), and electrical engineering (74 percent male).

--The most female-dominated majors are social work (85 percent female), health care administration (84 percent female), anthropology (80 percent female), nursing (80 percent female), and human resources (80 percent female).

--Nine of the 10 highest paying majors Glassdoor examined are male-dominated, and six of the 10 lowest-paying majors are female-dominated.

--Even across identical majors, men still make more. Across the 50 most common majors, men and women face an 11.5 percent pay gap on average in the first five years of their careers.

"Choice of college major can have a dramatic impact on jobs and pay later on," Glassdoor said. "Our results suggest that gender imbalances among college majors are an important and often overlooked driver of the gender pay gap."

Instead of detention, these students get meditation

Article courtesy of the Daily Journal via "The Rundown"

Is meditation the future of detention? Well, it is a possibility.

"I watched a video about an inner-city school that tried meditation with their primary grade students instead of implementing the usual detention, and I was really interested in the concept," said Skylar Brinkman, intern at Feed Arts and Cultural Center in Kankakee.

Meditation is known to promote mindfulness, which leads to a host of other positive behaviors. The video inspired Brinkman to propose meditation workshops specifically targeted to children and adolescents.

"Meditation has many benefits for kids, and one of the benefits is that it teaches impulse control," said Lia Schillinger, of Kankakee, who brought her 5-year-old daughter, Madelyn Schillinger-Hogan, to the Feed workshop.

How did Brinkman get 5- to 11-year-old kids to focus on meditating? As a former dance student, she also incorporated dance into the workshop.

Her song of choice? Taylor Swift's "Shake it Up." This activity allowed the little attendees to exert themselves enough to feel their heartbeat. Finding and focusing on the heartbeat would be a recurring theme throughout the workshop. "If they can't find anything else to focus on, they can always find their heartbeat," Brinkman said.

Then Brinkman had each attendee blow through a straw and move a piece of cotton along a line of masking tape attached to the floor. She varied the activity a few times before moving into the next portion of the workshop.

Then she got to the guided meditation. Brinkman had the kids lie on their backs and imagine themselves as hard spaghetti noodles. She used the analogy of inserting the stiff spaghetti noodles into warm water. She then went through a sequence in which she asked them to relax each part of the body from the toes to the top of the head. Brinkman said they could use this activity any time they were feeling stressed or concerned about a school project or assignment or even when they got into bed at night to help them to fall asleep.

on the other side of the street, denied a mortgage loan because of the color of their skin.

For us, those atrocities fueled our resolve, but today's Millennial can't relate because their parents could not, and it's not on MTV or BET.

They think that the gangsta rappers are their historians, and since they never rapped about our uncles being lynched because they smiled at a White woman, or brushed against a White man on a crowded street, it didn't happen.

...Understand brother and sister that the terrorist who shot the sister even after she willingly gave up her keys and purse during a carjacking never had to bite his lip because a stranger called him a boy. And he never got his butt kicked by a racist Milwaukee police officer because he ventured into the wrong neighborhood—being caught after dark outside the designated "Black neighborhoods" which was north of Keefe Avenue.

...Nobody born after 1976 was assigned to an overcrowded, segregated and underfinanced "Black" school, "served" by the least experienced teachers or studied from books so old they only mentioned 48 states and the first Black president (and I'm not talking about Obama. Didn't you know that Dwight Eisenhower's grandmother was a mulatto woman named Ida Stover?).

...They probably never met any of the hundreds who marched for 200 days across the 16th Street viaduct to support the open housing ordinance—that was never passed by a racist Common Council intent on keeping the races separated and the Black community contained.

They obviously don't know what it feels like to see a white child on the other side of the viaduct carrying signs declaring, "niggers to go back to Africa," or dancing to an early version of the Cuban Shuffle to avoid being hit by rocks and bottles thrown by their bigoted parents as the police looked on—some cheering and laughing at the one sided violence.

...We can't blame them for turning their backs on the revolution when they have been "educated" to believe we left Africa as slaves, that Europe is the cradle of civilization, Cleopatra looked like Elizabeth Taylor and Jeffrey Hunter was the real Jesus.

Come on brother and sister, since if you didn't tell them that the Garden of Eden was in Africa, and our ancestors created math, science and medicine when Europeans were still in caves, how else would they know?

...We can't blame them for not understanding the importance of supporting Black institutions, to buy Black, shop Black, and to make sure a dollar touches three Black hands before exiting our community.

Maybe the reason they spend their money paying for horsehair from a Korean (un)beauty supply store is because they think Julia Roberts is the most beautiful woman in the world (according to the most recent issue of People Magazine and blind people everywhere).

Hell, she's not even in the same league as Halle Berry, Gabriel Union, Venus or Serena Williams, or Alicia Keys. Nor are they in the same league as Jackie Appiah, Lupita Nyong'o, Bonang Matheba.

They never heard from their great grandparents how the crack of the whip sent shivers down their spine as a micro second later it ripped to the bone because they didn't pick enough cotton that day.

...Speaking of Africa and the Maafa, nobody

"Obviously, something happened, the civil rights train was derailed. We handed over the keys as they boarded the back of the bus, with weaves flying in the air, pants sagging down around their ankles, unable to hear the cry to continue the revolution because their ears were covered with $200 Beats headphones they couldn't afford, listening to Snoop Doggy Dud telling them to call their sisters bitches, to relax and smoke a joint and turn off "The Underground" because that history was "boring" and a misrepresentation (apparently we were happy go lucky slaves)."

told them of the 40 American slave revolts, and the millions of tribesmen who died trying to stop the traders before they reached Goree Island (look that up), or the millions of Black bones that line the ocean floor, victims of resistance or the miscalculation of food storage. In fact, did you tell them that many of the residents of Goree Island are the descendants of captured African girls who were raped under the shadow of the Catholic Church there? Or that one of the first slave ships was named "The Jesus"?

...How can you blame the Millennials for standing (and sinking) in political quicksand because they don't have a cultural foundation to stand upon?

Who do you point a finger at because most of them can't relate to the Motherland, don't see the value of an Africentric culture, or understand why God would pick that continent to begin life and create humanity?

Where do you point a finger to for perpetuating the accepted lie that we were lazy, dumb and happy go lucky slaves. Was Ben Carson telling the truth when he said our ancestors came here on the Good Ship Lollypop, as immigrants seeking gainful employment.

Speaking of Black beauty, don't get mad at the Millennials because they call each other niggers, our queens bitches and our fathers dogs because they only represent the fourth generation removed from the Willie Lynch methodology.

Remember, the author of the essay on how to control slaves (in and out of chains) said self-hatred, division, self-destructive behavior would last for at least 400 years once implemented.

In fact, don't blame them because most have never heard of Willie Lynch and think it's only natural for us to hate each other.

...Don't get irate or annoyed because they don't know our history, where we came from and who we really are. They weren't taught in school that their ancestors invented math, science and astrology. That the Greeks and Romans learned medicine at the feet of our ancestors like Amenhotep, the world's first recognized genius.

...Don't get incensed by their actions because few in this generation have ever lived in a true "community," a village where they could leave their doors open and didn't have to sleep behind barred windows.

...They can't imagine bar-be-cuing without armed guards (a few years ago some thugs not only stole my sister's cooking bar-be-cue, but the hot grill as well). They grew up attending churches where armed guards serve as ushers and security patrols the streets to stop car vandals.

...This is a generation that has to teach their children how to dive for the floor when they hear a gun shot, to run their taps for 15 minutes before drinking the lead tainted water.

...They don't know how it feels to go to any club in the central city without fear of being shot—on purpose or by accident.

...This is a generation that doesn't know about how to respond to someone stopping to help you change a tire, simply because they see you in need and view you as a neighbor. Hell, for that matter, how many Millennials grew up knowing their neighbor?

...Unless they attended a specialty, private school or suburban school, they probably don't know what the experience was like to sit through an English or history class where a teacher could be heard and everyone in the classroom was there to learn, to be educated...

...Most central city Millennials don't know what it's like to have breakfast or dinner with married parents, or to attend church other than Christmas, Easter and Mother's Day (that's the CME denomination in case you haven't heard).

...Don't get mad, just remember many—most—have never dated a Christian teenager, or at least one who proudly proclaimed their belief in God, and followed the tenets of the Bible or Koran.

...Think about it, the overwhelming majority of Black boys will never date a virgin, or a woman without children. Most sisters will never sleep with a Christian man who respects them, or one who spends time with his child(ren) because it's the right thing to do, not as a prelude to a booty call. Or dates as a prelude to marriage.

...We can't blame them for sporting shagging pants, because they don't know what it spells, backwards, or that homosexual slave "owners" (a nicer way to explain it) would sexually assault young Black boys (like the Milwaukee police did as part of routine profiling) and force them to wear their pants in that fashion to show the world they had been "broken in."

Yeah brother and sister, don't let your blood pressure go any higher because the truth is few Millennials ever marched for equal rights, justice or fair housing. They never heard about what happened on Bloody Sunday, ...They never heard the name Ernie Lacy, And the last time they stood in a line was to get tickets for a rap concert.

...You probably can't find a Millennial who ever heard of, or understood the importance of James Brown's "I'm Black and I'm Proud," much less Gil Scott Heron's "The Revolution Will Not Be Televised." In fact, you'd be lucky to find a new generation who knows the words of the Black National Anthem, or why it was introduced.

So don't get mad brothers and sisters if there's a pause in the revolution. Somebody probably told them that Barack Obama's election meant we were living in a post racial society and they believed it.

But don't worry, Donald Trump will probably wake them up after he makes America Great Again. And remember, you can't expect a Millennial to know how to change a tire if you never taught them the difference between a hammer and a lug wrench.
