PULSE OF THE COMMUNITY

Photos and question by Yvonne Kemp

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:
"Will the large number of women, and women-of-color, running for political office make a real difference? Why or why not?"

"Women of color must have a presence in government, civic participation and mobilization. Diversity is a powerful weapon against racism, sexism and all of the negative 'isms.' As our women leaders say, black women are leading the way...in formation. As an elder of politics and daughter of Wisconsin Representative Marcia P. Coggs, the first African American Woman in the State Legislature. We as women love our men, but our voice must be heard and our civil rights must have to platform to vote for our rights. There are few African American women in Congress and none in the Senate. That is why the 'Girls Day at City Hall' is so powerful, Alderwoman Milele A. Coggs introduces young girls into the world of government. We need more women of color to run for office and win...so our diverse interests can have a voice heard on all levels of government."

ELIZABETH COGGS

"Yes. I think women running for office is a great thing. But women-of-color make it even better. Our women-of-color can help by presenting a different view point on what is happening in the Black community!"

VICTOR TONEY

"It only makes logical sense to bring more women into public office, not just as a matter of equity, but in order to draw from a broad pool of talent...women-of-color in office will make a positive difference!"

CLAUDIA BREWER

"Yes, having women-of-color in any political office is a blessing because we will have someone who understands the needs of the Black community, who understands the struggles and can honestly advocate for change!"

FELICIA WILLIAMS

Jeanette Kowalik approved as new city health commissioner

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

The Common Council unanimously approved Milwaukee native Jeanette Kowalik as the city's new public health commissioner Wednesday.

The vote comes one day after Kowalik was questioned during a special meeting of the Public Safety and Health Committee. The meeting was described as the most light-hearted in months as Kowalik and committee members discussed health department issues and her plans to turn around the beleaguered department.

Kowalik will replace Bevan Baker, who resigned in January after revelations came to light about gross mismanagement of the department's once-touted childhood lead contamination prevention program.

During the Tuesday committee meeting, Kowalik outlined strategies she would implement to tackle a myriad of challenges ranging from childhood lead poisoning to employee morale within the health department.

Kowalik reportedly said her priorities are governance and accountability, public health workforce development and restoring confidence in programs and services.

She wants to create a "board of health," comprised of community and clin-

Splashy win!

Instead of letting Brewers' Leftfielder Christian Yelich enjoy a victory bath of Gatorade alone, his teammates decided to join him in a celebratory team soaking after Yelich beat a throw to first base for a walk-off win against their archrival the Chicago Cubs at Miller Park recently. The win helped the Brewers move closer to solidifying their hold on a wildcard playoff spot in this, the last month of the season. The Brewers are currently 79-61, three games behind the NL East leading Cubs. —Photo by Yvonne Kemp

Ayanna Pressley wins Democratic primary, will become first Black congresswoman in Massachusetts

Article courtesy of thegrio.com

Ayanna Pressley pulled off another stunner for women running for political office all over the United States.

Tuesday night, Pressley, the first woman of color to win a Boston City Council seat, won the Democratic primary for Congress, beating out 10-term Democrat Mike Capuano with 53 percent of the vote.

It's a race that many establishment Democrats wanted to go the other way, with black political leaders like John Lewis, Congresswoman Maxine Waters and Governor Deval Patrick, endorsing Pressley's opponent Capuano.

Pressley cried tears of joy after receiving the news of her win.

Reflections: You Are Them and They Are You

Have you ever wondered how your child would be when they grow up? If you take a look at yourself and think about examples that have been set for your children, and what influential company is being kept around them, you will know the answer to that question.

Your day-to-day behavior, from the way you communicate with people to the sound of your voice, is shaping the way your child will perform for the rest of their life.

According to Vanderbilt.edu, Psychologists refer to this as the influence of parent socialization, the way children learn the behaviors and skills necessary to interact in their everyday lives.

Did you know that the reading habits set forward by the parents, set and shape the fundamentals that mold a child into wanting to read, as well as, being able to read.

Many parents tend to get worried when, at a certain age, their child has yet to say certain words or phrases.

Yes, it is true that different children develop at their own pace, but at the same time, when a sensory or motor skill begins to slack beyond average, sometimes you have to take a step back and think about the examples and habits that are being displayed.

A daily/nightly routine of reading or call and response of different sounds and mouth movements can change the way a child speaks, and the way they are able to socially and independently put together a variety of thoughts, concepts and eventually sentences.

When it comes to reading, we must understand that it is more than just cuddling up and spending time with your little one. Reading on a regular basis to and with your child will literally stimulate their growth, allowing them to thrive in the classrooms, in social and cultural groups and even in the work place.

It is and will always be mind over matter. Books and reading teach many things to children, but when it comes to setting examples intentionally or unintentional your child's first teacher in this world is you.

If you find yourself needing more reading material and activity books for your little ones, feel free to stop by our office and grab fun filled, educational books for your family!—Paishance Welch

MATC to host Fire/Police EMS Expo

Milwaukee Area Technical College will host a free, public "Fire Police EMS Expo" from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 8, at the Oak Creek Campus, 6665 S. Howell Ave.

The Expo is designed to encourage adults and children to explore, understand and celebrate the work of firefighters, police officers and emergency medical technicians.

MATC trains students for careers in all three protective services fields.

The event kicks off with a 9 a.m. Antique and Active Emergency Vehicle Parade; followed by a September 11 Memorial Ceremony at 9:30 a.m. The Flight for Life helicopter will arrive for viewing at 11:30 a.m. (weather/emergency dependent).

Visitors also can watch demonstrations and view displays of tactical maneuvers, vehicle extraction, protective services training standards demonstrated by MATC instructors and students, police dogs and motorcycles.

Interactive activities for children and adults include an obstacle course, a coloring contest and exploration of the Milwaukee Fire Department Survive Alive house.

ical representatives. The board of health members would be required to not only complete health equity training, but dismantling racism would be integrated into the board's approach for overseeing the health department to ensure services and opportunities are equitable, thus reducing health disparities.

Kowalik's proposal would address what many observers say is an atmosphere of discrimination that has led to a dysfunctional culture within the department, which impacts how it delivers services to the community.

"To not be afraid to tackle the racism thing, to say we need to deal with equity and trauma and having those things being highlighted as a systemic thing; as an issue that we have to tackle in order to deal with the symptoms," said Ald. Chantia Lewis in applauding Kowalik for speaking openly about race and discrimination.

"Let's get down to the root of the cause," added Lewis, who was on the health commissioner selection committee.

However, Common Council President Ashanti Hamilton said the department's turnaround won't be easy or quick, noting it will take a coordinated team effort to turn it around.

"I'm telling you now, that with this council, there is an unwillingness to go back to an era of not understanding and not having transparency and not being able to see what needs to happen and how to bring a team atmosphere to what we're trying to accomplish," Hamilton warned.

Undaunted by Hamilton's statement, Kowalik said she needs the ability to provide the facts on a timely basis and reduce or eliminate any red tape so the community isn't guessing what is going on in the health department.

"There's no way that the first time you learn something in your health department is through the Journal Sentinel. That's unacceptable," she said.

Health Committee Chair Bob Donovan asked Kowalik to retain interim health commissioner Patricia McManus, who has been in the position since February until a permanent commissioner was found. A respected and admired community health advocate, McManus is the president of the Black Health Coalition of Wisconsin. McManus has been on leave from that position during her interim tenure with the health department.

McManus will reportedly work with Kowalik as a consultant.

Kowalik told Donovan and the committee she has drafted an action plan already, and that a more polished version will be presented to the committee within the next 30 days.

Donovan announced he will be introducing legislation creating the position of inspector general for the health department.

Born and raised in Milwaukee, Kowalik earned a PhD in health sciences from UWM.

She's currently an associate director for the Association of Maternal and Child Health Programs in Washington D.C.

Ayanna Pressley wins Democratic primary, will become first Black congresswoman in Massachusetts

"I knew we would be essentially, alone," Pressley said during her victory speech. "I knew we would find no favor with the Democratic establishment both here at home and in Washington. I knew we would have to fight... for every voter."

"I knew I would be demonized as entitled and what no woman would ever be, ambitious.space"> But change can win," she said to loud cheers.

"Ayanna Pressley is going to be a good Congresswoman and Massachusetts is going to be well served," Capuano said in his concession speech.

Pressley, 44, is a Chicago native, former community organizer, and former political aide who worked for Democrats such as Senator John Kerry.

Pressley, who represents the 7th district, one of Massachusetts' most diverse, has advocated for a progressive agenda, which includes abolishing ICE, increased mental health care services in schools and medicare for all.

"Community Talk" radio show signs-off

Ms. Cliffe Parris and son Keith Parrish broadcasted their last WGLB radio show, "Community Talk," recently. A large number of guests who have been on the show during its 17-plus years came by the radio station to say goodbye and reminisce about their times on the air with the family duo talking about community issues.

"Community Talk" was a bi-weekly community affairs radio program that addressed issues like education, health care, politics, religion, etc. "Community Talk" was the brainchild of Ms. Parris, a retired Milwaukee County employee who felt that the admonishment found in Hosea 4:6 that "the people (community) perish because of a lack of knowledge..." should be heeded and a platform provided for disseminating information to the community as a way to success for African American people in Milwaukee.

The first program aired on WGLB on October 7, 2000. In January of 2001, Ms. Parris asked her son Keith to join the program as her co-host to bring his experience in social services, politics and education to the show. In 2003, the late Robert Crymes was added as a co-host.

In the 17-plus years of its existence, "Community Talk" only missed one of its scheduled shows due to the funeral of Crymes. The show has attracted a number of prominent local guests: Gwen Moore, Lena Taylor, Shelia Cochran, Latanya Johnson, Gary George, Lenard Wells, Wanda Montgomery, Dr. Trinette McCray, and Barbara Toles to name a few.

PERSPECTIVES

QUOTE OF THE WEEK: "USE THE PAIN AS FUEL, AS A REMINDER OF YOUR STRENGTH!"

—PULITZER PRIZE WINNING PLAYWRIGHT AUGUST WILSON

MCJ EDITORIAL Milwaukee should get the nod to host the 2020 Democratic National Convention, and here's why...

Last week, a site selection group from the Democratic Party got the grand tour of Milwaukee to see if the state's largest city has what it takes to host the Democratic National Convention two years from now.

Milwaukee is one of three finalists to host the convention, to be held July 13-16, 2020. The other two cities are Houston and Miami Beach.

Milwaukee and its co-competitors were judged on three things by the selection group: diversity, resilience, and the ability to throw a party (pun not intended) for the Party and its delegates.

The city pitched to the selection group how affordable it is, compact (which means there are a whole lot of hotel rooms in downtown and 18,000 more rooms within a 30-mile radius), welcoming (after all, Milwaukee invented Gemutlichkeit, which is a German word used to convey a feeling of warmth, friendliness, and good cheer!) and—as noted earlier—diverse. Oh, and no hurricanes!

Unfortunately, the other two competing cities can't boast about that last point.

From our view of Milwaukee's chances, the city meets the criteria of the selection group: it is diverse, it is still one of the cleanest cities in the nation with an attractive lakefront, a Riverwalk, revitalized downtown, sandwiched between the Third Ward—and the still under-construction new entertainment district that will be right next to a brand-new, state-of-the-art arena to hold the conventioners: Fiserv Forum!

But Milwaukee is also a microcosm for America's ills, especially in its cities: poverty and unemployment (especially among communities of color), homelessness, a high number of renters, drugs and its offshoot: crime, a school system that struggles to meet national standards in a number of academic categories, human trafficking, and strained police/community relations. And if these problems weren't enough, a state legislature that is dominated by conservative Republicans who see Milwaukee as an albatross, not the straw that stirs the drink that is Wisconsin's economy.

Though some will see our shortcomings, many more conventioners won't see these realities if and when they come to our city to pick a Democratic nominee for the presidency of the United States of America. But, no doubt, the eventual nominee will mention the city, as it compares it to America and note that despite our problems we (and the nation) still have loads of promise, energy, passion, and the realization that for this nation (and as a city) to move forward, we must ALL move forward together, despite color, immigrant status, nationality, religion, or alternative gender preference.

We are all Americans. Out of our many differences, one people! Americans!

That's what our great city on a great lake represents: America. Hopefully the DNC site selection group saw that last week: a diverse city poised to do great things; but fully aware it can, will and must do better, just as our nation can, will and must do better to show ourselves and the world America is still GREAT!

California prison convicts, McDonald's employees and a good hope of cup of coffee... (What do they have in common?)

What do inmates in California's harshest prison and local McDonald's employees have in common?

In case you haven't guessed it, both groups were demonstrating last Thursday for "livable" wages.

Or as one McDonald's demonstrator told me while taking a break from his morning rush "chanting chorus," the low wage employees were protesting to draw attention to their being "forced" to accept "slave wages".

The protestors were demanding a minimum wage of $15 an hour, approximately twice what the average "Mickey D" employee earns today. That's the income they feel will push them out of the poverty well, allow them to support a family and become contributing members of society.

From that perspective, it's a moral imperative and the rulers of the cosmos are on their side.

Economically...well, that's a different story.

The prison inmates have a moral argument as well, but I don't see a national wave of support for them. And that may be in part because slavery was not entirely abolished in the constitution, and most maximum-security prison inmates are locked behind bars for a reason. Earning $1 an hour to produce goods for companies that make millions doesn't meet the smell test, but it's not like the inmates have too much choice. And by law, they are caught between a bar and a cell (that's the equivalent of "a rock and a hard place").

Thus, I found it much easier to relate to the fast food worker, although I don't see them closing the gap with many recent college graduates overnight; or next year, or maybe not even next decade.

One of the reasons for that dichotomy may be because of the other "Black" component to this scenario that served as a bridge between the two striking groups.

Black oil. Texas tea. Alert juice. In other words, coffee.

I left my homemade brew on the kitchen table as I rushed out of the house at 7:30 a.m. to attend a hearing at the county courthouse.

After my interlude, I stopped by the courthouse café only to learn that the non-descript coffee was selling for nearly $3 for a miserly 12 oz cup. Hell, I thought to myself heading to the nearest exit, that's about the same as a cup at Starbucks, an establishment I haven't visited but once or twice because I don't make enough to spurge on their brew.

In need of a jolt of java, however, I speedily left the courthouse for the nearest Northside Mickey D, which is where I ran into the protestors.

I soon regretted my decision (actually, not that soon, since I stood in line for 16 minutes before realizing coffee is apparently not a fast food), I exited the establishment only to run into one of the protestors, who was on a bathroom break.

I asked if the dozen or so protestors (and the white union organizers who seemed to be orchestrating the demonstration) worked in the restaurant, making a half-hearted joke about how the extra workers could hopefully speed up the service.

The brother laughed at my lame joke, and then immediately went into a bullet point of reasons why his $8.25 an hour job was unfair in the richest country on the planet.

Mickey D's wages were not enough to feed a family and kept them trapped in poverty.

He went on to say the entry level (service industry) workers at the new Bucks' arena were being paid over $12 which will eventually increase to $15 in 2020. Airport entry-level workers are also being paid in that price range.

So why not burger flippers?

I started to go through a litany of questions about how most franchisers can ill afford to double wages and expect a reasonable profit, how some people would lose jobs to seniority or the eventual automation and how doubling salaries will impact consumers.

But since those questions, albeit relevant, would have made me sound

SIGNIFYIN'

By Mikel Kwaku Oshi Holt

Like a conservative or the antichrist, I pushed them to the side and instead asked the brother did he support socialism, and did he vote for Bernie Sanders as I did in 2016.

Obviously, raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour wouldn't tip the scales to a socialist paradigm, although eliminating poverty through a redistribution of wealth would.

But this is a capitalist society, however, and while Christ Emanuel would not doubt be a socialist, since the Bible acknowledges that the poor will always be among us, apparently Nyame saw merit in a system that insures their population. And He/She guaranteed that fact with the election of Donald Trump as president.

And then there's the related question that underpins this debate: is it appropriate to categorize salaries based on credentials and job importance? In other words, should a recent college graduate earn the same as a non-skilled fast food worker? Should an engineer earn more than a sanitation engineer should?

The critics say socialism doesn't work because it eliminates incentive. Some even point to Cuba, which several years ago made fundamental changes to its socialist structure because too many people on the bottom—those who had not capitalized on their talents or opportunities—were getting subsidies that equaled people who did.

But we're not living in a socialist country, if we did, people wouldn't be dying because they can't afford medicine, the elderly wouldn't have to eat dog food, health care would be more important than bombs and Trump would be a cab driver (Uber wouldn't trust him with his own car).

That's not to say we don't have socialistic programs—Medicaid and Medicare, public education and welfare for the rich who own 80% of the wealth and wouldn't miss a martini lunch if the minimum wage were raised to $30 per hour.

But giving up money is to give up power in this country, and as long as those with the money are the same people who control the rules, and the debate, the Republicans will fight for the "right" of zillionaires to keep every buck, and the Democrats will use the minimum wage as a political issue they know they can't (and probably don't) want to fix.

But politics and religion aside, this boils down (or should I say brews up) to the cost of a cup of coffee.

If I didn't want to plunk down $3 for a 12 oz cup of coffee at the courthouse café, or a similar amount at Starbucks, chances are I wouldn't want to pay that much or more at McDonalds. And wait 16 minutes to boot!

I support raising the minimum wage. I also support free college education for everyone, universal healthcare ... But as a small businessman, I also understand the science of economics and profitability. People don't run businesses to lose money, and those who do, generally end up looking for minimum wage jobs themselves.

There's a moral question. And there's an economic question. And there's a caffeine issue.

I'll ponder the former two while enjoying a cup of home brewed coffee. I figure I'd better get used to it, because it may become my tradeoff in the future.

Hotep.

No Longer the Victim

Once, I too blamed the world for my pain; for the rejection I felt every day for losing my birth mom at the age of two months, my father passing when I was seven years old, not being completely understood and then not being loved the way an orphaned child needed to be loved.

A lot of people say: "Well, Torre you had a home and a lovely mother," but individually, something was still missing. I can argue all day about what I thought was not right about being a child, but as an adult I had to shake that curse.

This was the curse that prevented me to be the parent my children could respect. It was the curse that caused me to want or need others to hurt as I deeply did. I had to find reasons to love myself, before I could ever love or respect another.

One day sitting in a prison group, the discussion was about abuse and who we thought abused us the most. I passed up on commenting after hearing the "my mom," "my dad," and "the white man" comments. I just didn't want to ridicule anyone one that day, but when I sat back in the cell that night going

URBAN MY DIALOGUE

By Torre "ToeJoe" Johnson

over my thoughts, I realized that it was myself that hurt or abused me more than anyone.

I had accepted the victim stance and ran with it. I allowed it to become an excuse for my ignorance, only then did I notice the walls that surrounded me and that I could become free because only I had the key to release me. I was hiding within myself for so many years. I had to asked myself for forgiveness.

Today, I am able to protect myself and help others deal with the fact that, yes something may have happened in our lives that may affect you throughout our lives, but it doesn't necessarily have to be a death sentence. It should be used as a learning experience. I am no longer a victim to self or a victimizer to others.

The trauma I suffered may have been mentally severe, but I was able to recover and so can many others. I must say, you don't want to try and teach someone about their personal trauma and then walk away from them. If we know what's causing these problems and life issues, we must ask ourselves, "What are we really doing to solve them?" I am 54 this year. That's over half of 100 and these issues are still going on. Saving our children is important, but please do not forget about the parents who may have been... I'm not going to say it...okay, who may have experienced the pain before them. Peace.

PUBLIC NOTICE OF A PUBLIC MEETING TO DISCUSS THE CHOICE NEIGHBORHOOD PLAN FOR HOLTON TERRACE HOUSING DEVELOPMENT

Public Notice is hereby given that the Housing Authority of the City of Milwaukee (HACM) will hold a Public Meeting regarding a Choice Neighborhood Implementation (CNI) grant application to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The CNI grant plan will revitalize the Holton Terrace public housing development at 2825 N. Holton Street, and will help to catalyze critical improvements to the surrounding Harambee neighborhood in Milwaukee. For the CNI plan, the neighborhood is defined as Capitol Drive on the north, North Avenue on the south, Holton Street on the east, and I-43 on the west.

Information on the proposed Choice Neighborhood plan will be presented at the public meeting on Tuesday, September 11 at 5:00 p.m. The public meeting will be held at the Clinton Rose Senior Center at 3045 N. Dr. Martin Luther King Drive. Interested persons including public housing residents, community organizations, businesses, neighborhood residents, and the general public are invited to come to the meeting to receive information about the Choice Neighborhood plan and to provide feedback, comments, and suggestions.
