QUESTION OF THE WEEK:
"Do you think the Milwaukee Brewers will win the World Series? Why or why not?"

"I believe the Brewers will win the World Series because they play together. They are a close knit team and they play to win. The Brewers manager is at the top of his profession and he makes the right decisions."

PHILLIP PARKER

"The Brewers, because they've won 11 straight and typically, who ever wins in October wins the world series."

ELIZABETH LUCKETT

"(The) Brewers will win because we have two MVP candidates, they're on a super hot win streak and won't turn back. Plus, I am wearing (the) Brewers colors!"

JOHNNIE FERGUSON

"The Brewers swept St. Louis in St. Louis when it mattered. The Brewers swept the Cubs in Chicago when it mattered; then we beat the Rockies two games in MKE and one game in Colorado. World Series, here we come!"

Longtime educator puts renewed focus on the classroom

By unanimous vote, the Milwaukee Board of School Directors officially named Dr. Keith P. Posley superintendent of the state's largest school district recently.

Posley had been interim superintendent, taking over from former superintendent Dr. Darienne Driver, who left last May to take a job with the United Way in Detroit.

Posley has begun the new school year with a renewed focus on district classrooms and increasing academic achievement. He returned more than $11 million in funding to schools when he restructured the 2018-19 budget. He also reorganized MPS Central Services to focus on supporting schools and students.

"I am excited and honored to continue my work as Superintendent of Milwaukee Public Schools," said Posley. "Nothing is more important than the academic success of our young people. I look forward to continuing to work collaboratively with the Milwaukee Board of School Directors, families, staff and all community friends of our students."

Posley is no stranger to MPS, having spent nearly 30 years with the district (continued on page 8)

ARRESTED DEVELOPMENT'S SPEECH RETURNS HOME WITH HIS DEBUT DOCUMENTARY, "16 BARS"

Milwaukee native and lead singer of the iconic Hip-Hop group Arrested Development Todd "Speech" Thomas is coming home October 20th with his first documentary film titled "16 Bars," about a unique rehabilitation program in Richmond, VA he was involved with that allows prisoners to write and record their own songs.

Speech spent 10 days working with the inmates to write and record their original music in a makeshift recording studio, unearthing painful elements of their pasts as they create their art.

The film will make its Milwaukee premiere during the 2018 Milwaukee Film Festival on October 20 at the Oriental Theater, starting at 9:30 p.m. Speech and the documentaries director, Sam Bathnick, will be in attendance.

The film will also be shown October 21, 1 p.m., at the Times Cinema and October 24, 10 p.m., at the Oriental.

The film focuses on four inmates who battle cycles of incarceration and addiction. "These men are behind bars, but they still have voices," says Speech during an interview about the film. "This music is capturing this moment in time in our country."

The United States boasts the highest incarceration rates in the world, and the film humanizes some of the complex issues surrounding America's broken criminal justice system. The music of the film serves as a rare testimony to the messy truth behind the system's revolving door.

Earning their trust, and aided by loving camerawork and superbly produced recording sessions, the filmmakers deftly capture the men's deepest hopes and fears. Suspense builds as each man works towards freedom in the best way he knows how.

How Can You Teach Family Values to Children?

When I was younger, my mom used to make sure that my brothers and I understood the importance of family and what it means to be a family.

Trips out of town to visit other relatives were always fun and enlightening. Church family gatherings were endearing and intimate. These little things that kept us in the loop with our family has left such a huge impact on my life.

I value family more than anything, and even though we may not always get along, the bigger picture is that family is all that we have.

It is often said that children should learn all they can between birth and the age of seven. Of course, learning never stops, but there are vital lessons and developmental enhancements that should be learned early in your child's life. One of those things is family values. It is very easy for children to grow up and separate from everyone and everything.

I am here to say that learning the importance of my family has allowed me to always stay connected even as an adult in a completely different city.

Parents, one thing we don't want to do is force any activities or outings on our youth, but we do want to cater to them as an individual.

If spending time together requires you to let your child pick the activity, they will be more willing to participate and be more engaged. Here are a few ways you can teach kids the importance of family.

#1. Talk about and explore family history

Just recently, my mom and brothers and I had DNA tests ran to see who was a part of our family tree. As exciting as that sounds, the results were even more exciting! We found out so much about our family and even found a long lost cousin who had no idea we existed!

Thanks to our searching and exploring, last year's reunion, taught me so much about my great, great aunts, uncles and grandparents.

Even though they all have passed, exploring my history with my family allowed me to gain a sense of self as well as appreciate the family members who are still living.

#2. Story Time

I am 24, but I love stories. I love imagining the picture in my head and somewhat seeing what the storyteller is saying to me. If anybody loves stories, it's definitely our youth!

I used to love when my mom's sister would come to visit. My brothers and I always wanted her to tell us a story about my mom and her siblings and how they grew up.

We wanted know everything, from what kind of activities they played growing up to how their holidays were spent each year. My mom is 1/9 children. Can you imagine all the stories there were to tell about 9 children?

Hearing these stories gave me a better understanding of relationships and growth. It made family visits more enjoyable and heart-felt and it got even better when my other aunt pulled out the photo albums!

#3. Make Family Gatherings First

As parents, you should teach your children the importance of family by always putting family events first. Once again, we are all we have. I can honestly say, because of how much of a priority my family has been as a child, as an adult, family gatherings will always come first.

Even if it's just myself and my mom, or myself and one of my brothers. I believe in family time and bonding. Bonding does not happen overnight. So I've learned to maximize each visit by spending quality time with those I love every time I see them .

Last but not least...

MCJ COMMENTARY

We’ll have to wait and see if now Justice Brett Kavanaugh’s recent “trials” will influence his decisions on the high court

Some of us are old enough to remember the Anita Hill-Clarence Thomas controversy, circa 1991. Many African Americans were happy an African American was being considered for the Supreme Court to replace retired justice Thurgood Marshall, the first African American to sit on the highest court in the land.

As the first Black justice, Marshall had the racial experiences and cultural understanding of issues that often disproportionately affect Black Americans.

Recommended by then President George H.W. Bush, father of past President George W. Bush, Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas had the scholastic prowess to impact the court, yet many questioned his conservative views and what influence he might bring to future cases, especially those directly affecting the Black experience.

The Supreme Court has ruled on innumerable issues including Civil Rights, Brown vs the Board of Education (that showed American education was not equal and Black children had to be given access to better education opportunities); Women’s Voting Rights, the Voting Rights for African Americans after the fights for standard rules and policies free of the ravages of racism identified by Fannie Lou Hammer, and other cases such as those affecting criminalization of drugs during the Clinton presidential years.

Those rulings took mothers and fathers and left children destitute in impoverished communities. Only now have many of those felons been released from prisons after 15, 20 and 25 years, fifteen, twenty and twenty-five. The loss in lives, opportunities and futures is still being felt. Those returnees are now attempting to begin new lives, free, seeking employment and retraining, hoping their felon status will be overlooked and their desires for equity can be realized.

Yes, we too tire of having to think from that prism. But history continues to support that we must see life, history and our futures through the lens of the African American experience, And yes, regrettably, it continues to play out in every area of our lives, from conception to the tomb, from birth rates to mortality rates, from housing ownership to neighborhood proclivities. The Supreme Court will continue to shade our experiences, racially, economically, educationally and electorally. The Voting Rights Act continues to be approved in the Congress every few years. Did you know that?

And while we have heard over and over again concerns about Roe v. Wade in a highly conservative court, the Black community is most concerned about basics like the right to vote, treatment of felons, insistence upon rights to live where you can afford, equal access to employment and the quality of the schools your children will attend.

Too often we are victimized because we are a minority and the laws further press down the victims. We do not seek equality any longer. Equality continues to allude us. But we do seek equity, which means seeing the minority experience as something that must take the victim from where he or she is and ensure that he or she is pushed, prodded, supported until he is capable of reaching his peers and colleagues, others born in their same era.

Justice Kavanaugh heard his first cases as a Supreme Court justice Tuesday. One of the major cases before the court today is ruling on the length of prison terms in drug cases and if longer terms and penalties will once again be considered.

This conservative court will affect rulings for decades to come. This is what many of us watching the news and the senate hearings, with the intensity of the O.J. Simpson trial, were most concerned about.

We are justifiably concerned about the issues brought forth by Dr. Christine Blasey Ford, those issues are real; and they can never be ignored. Sexual assault has too long been relegated to “non-issue status,” while the trauma is deprecating for decades, for the victims and their families.

We hope the Court, and Justice Kavanaugh in particular, will now view the laws of the land through prisms of the law versus “just us.” He has been put through a great deal of scrutiny the last several weeks, witnessing

It’s time for Black women to stop capping a white feminist agenda

By Marlon Smith, courtesy of thegrio.com - Posted October 8, 2018

As a male supporter to Black women, I hope my sisters finally got the message that white women are not their allies. Maine Sen. Susan Collins support of Brett Kavanaugh’s confirmation to the Supreme Court was the ultimate betrayal of one woman against many.

Ever since Hillary Clinton’s presidential nomination, I have struggled to understand as a Black man why so many Black women have heralded white feminist agendas in support of white women who diminish the coalition among Black men and women.

These are the same white women who voted overwhelmingly for a racist, misogynistic, xenophobic President, and who, according to a recent Quinnipiac poll, were just as likely to believe Kavanaugh (41 percent) as Prof. Christine Blasey Ford (48 percent).

Black women have buried a Black womanist agenda – feminism that centers their history and lived experience— for a white feminist perspective that has always advanced patriarchy and white hegemony, leaving them with nothing but broken homes and ill-gained promises.

How can we forget the image of Clinton standing center stage at the 2016 Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia?

There, she was surrounded by Black women, affectionately named “Mothers of the Movement,” in recognition of the public killings of unarmed Black people, including several children.

Let’s put aside the fact these deaths were largely the slaying of Black males, and the emotional commitment of Black fathers to their

Black children was completely erased. Black women still received nothing for their public performance and support of another white woman, who gained millions of dollars in residual profit from her book.

I still haven’t heard if those mothers received a check.

The history of feminism has left Black women lacking social, gender and economic equity. For example, Black women’s top jobs pay half what white women’s do, according to the U.S. Census Bureau and the Economic Policy Institute. While white women earn 79 percent of the white man’s dollar, Black women earn only 63 percent. This, despite Black women having higher labor force participation than white women.

When white women were making inroads into industries such as education, airline industry, and board rooms, Black women were still being left in kitchens, domestic work, and low-skill factory jobs.

But now as Collins cast her vote in support of a rich, white man who at best has proclivities toward exaggeration and distortion, and at worse is a liar and sexual offender, she has again awakened us to the motivations of the 53 percent of white women who voted for Donald Trump.

When it is all said and done, white women will support patriarchy and whiteness for their own personal, social and economic security.

Did Collins think about the vulnerable position she placed on Black women when she decided to support Kavanaugh in spite of believing that Blasey Ford “is a survivor of a sexual assault and that this trauma has upended her life.” If she could think so casually about Blasey Ford’s experience, then what support will Black women get from white women when it comes to their bodily integrity?

What institutions will white women such as Collins help construct to support Black women when it comes to family services, healthcare or domestic assault now that the highest court in the land has been stocked and loaded to thwart movement on progressive issues or uphold a woman’s right to agency?

If Black women hold on to what Collins asserts, then a testimony that is “sincere, painful, and compelling” is no defense.

So pleading the case of Black women to white women seems pointless.

As far as I can recall, the white feminist agenda has never put forth safe guards to protect Black women’s interests. For centuries white women have been co-conspirators to slavery, lynching, mass incarceration, voter suppression and gender inequality. They have publicly used Black women as props to advance a cause from which they would only profit.

Don’t believe it? This is, in part, why Sojourner Truth declared her Black womanhood in her “Ain’t I A Woman” speech at the 1851 Women’s Rights convention in Akron, Ohio.

This is not to say Black men and Black women don’t have conflict around violence and gender parity. Without question, this relationship needs critical attention. Even as Black women advance at work and in entrepreneurship, they still only earn 87 percent of a Black man’s dollar. And Black men need to speak louder against domestic violence. We need to challenge the social arrangement that displaces Black men from children, particularly the prison industrial complex, leaving our women as sole breadwinners in the home.

Hopefully, Collins, however, has helped Black women to finally accept that the advancement of Black womanhood will never be secured in the arms of white women.

Dr. Marlon A. Smith, an Encore Public Voices Fellow of The OpEd Project, is a scholar-activist whose work examines the intersection of race, gender, and mass incarceration. He is the author of “Reshaping Beloved Community: The Experiences of Black Male Felons and Their Impact on Black Radical Traditions.”

The time is now, Black Milwaukee

I am going to keep repeating this, Black Milwaukee must stop praising collaborative initiatives, while actually practicing black separatism.

Black Milwaukee has got to find a way to shake the need to assist others in a celebratory mood. I am always being told that it’s not about credit, only to turn around and witness some people drowning from “Thank you’s” and demanding ovations.

In addition to that, there’s also those that say, “It’s not about the money,” but won’t budge unless they are getting paid.

We have to begin to accept responsibility for our actions and for the lack of the mistakes that are constantly being made while trying to do good.

We need to do more and more until our actions have become that cure we are in desperate need of.

Milwaukee has so many talented people of color, but many of them will not step up entirely because of the fear of being overwhelmed, as well as, overworked. This all happens while others get credited and compensated.

Let’s not forget that many are overlooked as well. In many instances, Black Milwaukee will reach outside of our circle in search of spiritual advisors or national heroes, all while ignoring our everyday brothers and sisters who share our world.

URBAN MY DIALOGUE

By Torre “ToeJoe” Johnson

Sometimes, we even expect them to embrace someone else’s plan or agendas.

This is really not going to happen. If it’s for us, it’s got to be by us and again, only we can save us. For anything to work, a majority has to assemble in a common space, not just the same few faces.

There must be a collective group of representatives who will stand up for themselves and those they chose too. They must get paid to represent either political or social advocates. It needs to be done using home grown individuals to achieve growth, peace and self-respect. It needs to be done now.

OPEN LETTER TO OUR READERS

Milwaukee Community Journal is an actual brick and mortar building, not just an online entity. I was downstairs reviewing our equipment in the storage office and it's like visiting a museum. Old relics, equipment, computers, software and past editions illuminate 43 years journaling the history of change.

Since our origin in 76, we've moved with our audience. Today our readers are predominantly millennials, 18-40 years of age, shakers and movers, the buyers! They are buying homes, cars, raising families. They are eating "fresh," active in politics, exercising and partying.

Our readers find us in print, with our twice-weekly editions in tenured retail outlets, churches and selective distribution spots. But they also read us online at milwaukeecommunityjournal.com We're in this to win this! We're dynamic....crisp clear....interactive...and to be honest - exploding with information that you want to read!

We're perfect for new and established advertisers! We want more local interaction and community written articles. We want to offer more millennial access to a proven community source.

This is who we are, but one thing is still deep on our hearts, and that is you've got to join our team. You're the community part of the Milwaukee community journal. Let's build together!

How Can You Teach Family Values to Children?

#4. Create Family Traditions

Everyone loves when they can look forward to something good. For me, that good thing was (and still is) spending Christmas with my family. Every year we travel to Ohio. We've been doing this traditional vacation ever since I was a little girl.

As a child, it was all about the presents, the great food and the fun I knew that I would have. As an adult, I simply appreciate just sitting in the living room near the fire place and catching up on life, laughing at old memories and building a bond with my family.

These are only a few examples of how family values can be taught to your child. Teach them while they are young and they will forever understand and appreciate it when they grow older.

Do you have any special tips and tricks that help you implement a good family-building bond? If so, share with us at Paishance.mcjatlanta@gmail.com for a feature in next week's article!

first-hand how the powerful have the ability to dictate the direction of your life...like a judge. He's now witnessed and felt the effects of that impact for the first time in his life.

The women accusing him of alleged sexual assault or in appropriate behavior had a right to be heard. Their testimonies are credible, compelling and still must be addressed. We all learned again that power demands and dictates power!

Justice Kavanaugh has promised to serve the national agenda, not a party agenda.

We hope he shall have that capacity as the months continue; and his appointment of women to his staff is noted with applause.

We hope these recent experiences he's endured will dictate his decisions and thoughts when considering a case. The law is more than party, the law is people. The needs of the people have to be viewed through the lens of possibility, not politics that sways in a fickle manner every four years.

Our democracy must include ALL, because victimization can only create new victims, who will resort to survival.

To our community, there are too many felons who can no longer vote. But you can work to encourage others to vote. And our millennials who have this opportunity—many for the first time—do your due diligence. VOTE. We just saw again, the power of the VOTE.

WHATEVER YOU CONSIDER IMPORTANT, VOTE!

Study the candidates, determine their positions on the things you hold important...and GET OUT AND VOTE! A DEMOCRACY ONLY WORKS WHEN EVERYONE VOTES!

We are a majority-rules nation. While we continue to be a minority, we are a majority in the city of Milwaukee, especially the central city.

VOTE VOTE VOTE! Your vote counts!

PULSE OF THE COMMUNITY

Photos and question by Yvonne Kemp

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:

"How important are Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCU's) to Black education?"

WILLIAM T. MCINTOSH III

"HBCU's serve as a direct connection for education and serves as a conduit for the Black community."

BILL BECKETT

"HBCU's equal the bedrock of the Black professional class in the U.S."

LAZONNIE BELTON

"HBCU's are important for (the sake of) tradition. I haven an HBCU grand-daughter enrolled in Louisiana. (It's about) pride and exposure."

TAMMY BELTON DAVIS

"On a scale of 1 to 10, they rank a 10 in importance. Being in that environment, on the campuses, and understanding the impact of history is paramount to our future."

"Havin' a Ball!"

African American community has the 16th largest GNP in the world!

By Mikel Holt

America's "colored community" has become one of the country's most influential consumer purchasing blocks, sustaining many product lines, and "colorizing" advertising campaigns, several independent reports reveal.

The Black consumer now represents a $1.3 trillion consumer market, which makes it the 16th largest (GNP) in the world, ranking higher than Spain.

According to one source, minority consumers purchased a majority of all dry vegetables and grains, and over 40% of all baby food and personal bath products sold in America last year.

The latest U.S. Census Bureau data shows America's brown community will become the majority in America by mid-century and already purchases a disproportionate amount of most major essential products.

Despite stereotypes and assumptions to the contrary, a majority of African Americans receive their editorial content and advertising suggestions from the Black Press, a major study by the Nielson Company has revealed.

In its latest national survey and assessment, Nielson reported that 52% of Black consumers surveyed were described as "conscious readers" of the printed medium, which is 30% higher than the general population.

Funeral services set for former Milwaukee County Board Chairman and County Executive Lee Holloway

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

A memorial service will be held Friday, March 23 for former Milwaukee County Supervisor Lee Holloway, the first African American chairman in the history of the Milwaukee County Board of Supervisors and county executive. He died recently at age 71.

The service will be held at Wisconsin Memorial Chapel, 13235 W. Capitol Dr. Viewing is scheduled from 9 until 11 a.m. Service will begin at 11 a.m.

A self-described "product of blue-collar, working-class people," the Milwaukee native was first elected to the board in 1992, representing the county's 5th district on the city's northside for 18 years.

He served as board chair from 2004 to 2012. Holloway assumed the county executive position in 2010, after then Milwaukee County Executive Scott Walker was elected governor. One month later, Holloway appointed former Milwaukee Common Council President and interim Mayor Marvin Pratt as interim county executive.

Holloway was instrumental in the creation of a county general assistance medical program—a health safety net—that subsequently was expanded statewide as Badger Care.

A friend of Holloway, Robbie Fulton, believes the former board chair was instrumental in preventing Walker from being able to "suppress and oppress

They were our heroes, members of our segregated extended family who taught us how to overcome in spite of it.
