PULSE OF THE COMMUNITY

Photos and question by Yvonne Kemp

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:
We asked four volunteers at the recent O'Bee's Toy House event sponsored by Northwest Funeral Chapel:
"Why is it important to volunteer time to help make children a little happier at Christmas?"

"It's important to volunteer because our children desperately need to feel love and joy for Christmas. If we give more of our time and effort to our children, we make a safer and happier community. Our children need positive influences."

TARA S.

"It's important to volunteer my time to create a sense of calm and peace for our kids. When they see that someone cares about them, it creates a sense of pride within themselves. Being the example to pattern after."

REGINA BOSTON-DIXON

"Because it is important to show our kids love and commitment for their future. I was given that as a child. Ho, Ho, Ho, Merry Christmas!"

MICHAEL SMITH

"I want our kids to enjoy the Christmas season, and show them the same tradition that I was shown as a child."

It's music to Chevy's ears!

Alderman likes what he hears from Governor-elect Tony Evers during his address to Common Council

Milwaukee Alderman Cavalier (Chevy) Johnson said it was refreshing to hear Governor-elect Tony Evers express a desire to be a partner, not an enemy, of the city of Milwaukee.

Ald. Johnson

Johnson made his remarks recently after hearing Evers address the full council at city hall during an address to that governing body.

Evers reportedly told the council that in order to have a strong Wisconsin, there needs to be a strong Milwaukee. The governor-elect signaled support for finding new ways for the Milwaukee region to fund many of its pressing needs.

"We have to find flexibility for the citizens and decision makers in the Milwaukee area to have revenue streams that meet their needs," Evers reportedly said. Among the ideas Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett and city officials have floated the last several years has been a sales tax (to fund

Disney Celebrates 90 Years Of Mickey Mouse With Stunning Art Exhibition

By Diane Christiansen, originally posted November 29, 2018

Walt Disney's iconic and adorable rodent Mickey Mouse turned 90 this year!

To pay homage to the mouse "who started it all," the Disney Corporation recently unveiled "Mickey: The True Original," a 16,000-square-foot immersive art exhibition in Manhattan, New York. Open to the public from November 8, 2018 to February 10, 2019, it features stunning Mickey-inspired exhibits created by over 20 contemporary artists from all over the world.

Among the highlights is the "Hello Mickey" installation, which is dedicated to the mouse's big screen debut: Steamboat Willie on November 18, 1928.

The short film, depicting Mickey piloting a steamboat while whistling a catchy, cheerful tune, was the first Disney cartoon to feature synchronized sound, incorporating both character sounds and musical composition.

The exhibit also includes remakes of the short clip created in various styles by different artists and a life-size steamboat, where visitors can test their piloting skills.

Also fun is the "It's Black & White" exhibit, which celebrates the early Mickey black-and-white comic strips and the "1928: Original Muse" installation dedicated to Mickey's global influence throughout the years. In the "Burst into Color" room, fans will be treated to Mickey's fascinating transition from black-and-white cartoons to color.

Fans of the classic 1940 Disney release Fantasia will be delighted with New York-based artist Oliver Clegg's "Sorcerer's Way." Named after the movie's popular "Sorcerer's Apprentice" segment, in which Mickey wears the sorcerer's hat and tries his hand at magic, only to fail miserably, it features a giant sorcerer's hat as well as fake wells filled with original art from the movie.

The centerpiece of the exhibit is a mural of Mickey's famous sorcerer's costume painted on recycled outdoor theater chairs.

When asked about the unique canvas, Clegg said, "For me, what is most interesting about Fantasia as a project [is that] it's a piece that was literally meant to engage an audience. The choice of the chairs was important because they represented the viewer and the audience."

One of the most eye-catching installations, "The Cosmic Cavern," comes from American painter and street artist Kenny Scharf. Inspired by one of Disney's first licensed products, the Mickey Mouse watch, it transforms the iconic timepiece into an immersive neon technicolor experience complete with bright green, blue, yellow, and pink hues.

The techno music blaring in the background crowns the surreal experience. The observant few will also notice the Easter eggs – depictions of Mickey – artfully hidden among the large clocks and memorabilia hanging from the ceiling and walls.

The pop-up exhibition also features a carefully curated selection of Mickey Mouse memorabilia from Disney's archives, providing fans with a never-before-seen glimpse into the character's evolution over the past 90 years.

The best part of the temporary show, however, is the Ample Hills Creamery counter in the Mickey Mouse club room, where visitors are treated to scoops of two delicious ice cream flavors – Confetti Celebration and Triple Chocolate Surprise. Created especially for the occasion, they include lots of birthday cake and Mickey-shaped white chocolate pieces filled with fudge and tangy lemon cream – yum!

Disney also honored the world's most famous mouse with a two-hour television special featuring star-studded musical performances, moving tributes, and unreleased short films on November 4, 2018. The landmark birthday is also being celebrated with tie-in events at all Disney Parks and Resorts.

Ald. Johnson likes what he hears from Gov. Elect Tony Evers about greater cooperation, respect to city by state public safety efforts), which requires state approval; or a regional sales tax which would help fund cultural or transportation needs.

Evers' visit to city hall to speak to the common council was his first, which is one more than the total visits by out-going governor Scott Walker, which is zero. That fact is emblematic of the strained relationship between the city and state ever since Walker and Republican legislators took control of both branches of state government.

Recent state budgets slashed already frozen state shared revenue payments to the city, leaving the city with a reported $105 million annual shortfall versus 2003 shared revenue payments.

Johnson was alarmed to hear Evers note the 160 bills limiting local control passed in the last eight years during Walker's and GOP lawmakers' control of the state-house. It's especially troubling, the alderman said, when a number of those bills—and what's been slipped into the state budget process—greatly impacted, if not directly targeted, Milwaukee.

Johnson said he was happy to learn Evers will seek to focus on issues important to Milwaukee like early childhood education, improving healthcare accessibility, laying the groundwork for additional multimodal transit, and reform in the Department of Corrections.

"I was also excited to hear that the governor-elect understands that as a big city, Milwaukee's needs are unique and that this city should have flexibility as it relates to raising revenue that does not rely so heavily on property taxpayers."

But before initiatives can be enacted to make fiscal life easier for Milwaukee and ease the tension between it and the state legislature, Evers must first contend with state Republican efforts to curtail his gubernatorial powers.

The outgoing governor is expected to sign legislation passed last week in a lame-duck legislative session that limits Evers power and the power of State Attorney-General-elect Josh Kaul in several major segments of state government.

Evers said last week the sweeping changes are an effort to not only expand the power of the GOP-controlled assembly and senate, but is a repudiation of the will of the people of Wisconsin who voted for change on November 6.—Article compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

PERSPECTIVES

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:
"The more you know your history, the more liberated you are." — Maya Angelou

LaShawnda S. Wilkins

Change for 2019

The new year is approaching quickly and one thing that must be on your list is change if you find yourself unhappy. Every year brings about a new journey. You have those ups. You have those downs.

You have those people that care about you and those that may not have your best interest at hand. Nonetheless it's life and there's some things that happen that are quite frankly out of your control. Instead of dwelling on those things, let focus our attention on the things that we do have the opportunity to change. Let's discover our power within to create a better outlook in 2019. Here's 5 things to plan for to get you where you need to be.

1. Have Patience

Understand greatness doesn't happen overnight. It takes time to discover the real you and even more time to maximize your potential in this world. Sure, some things may not have worked out in your favor, but as long as you tried, you have moved forward.

2. Stay Organized

Your environment reflects your mindset. Before the year begins do some deep cleaning in your household. Clear the atmosphere. Buy a planner and begin to plan out each and every day. Buy some containers for things that can be stored and get rid of things you no longer need. This helps you to stay focused and at peace.

3. Protect Your Peace

Get rid of connections that aren't healthy for you. Toxic relationships, friends and family members that frustrate you must be left outside of your personal space. Understand this does not mean you don't love them, this means you're taking the time to love and cater to your mental health.

4. Do More

There's no limits to where you can go this year. Nothing and no one can stop you but you. So begin to plan a few trips. Date yourself.

Begin to show yourself that you love you for who you are. Write more this year. Reflect more. And most of all do at least 6 things you have never done before in 2019.

5. Love the Process

Realize that you can't get where you really want to go if you don't fall in love with what it takes to get there. Set your goals and make them realistic. Write down all the steps it's going to take to get there and get to it. If you find yourself unmotivated begin to dig deeper into your why. Know that there's growth in every stage as long as you keep pushing.

-LaShawnda S. Wilkins (@speaklifesawnie)

If you want Black folks to continue being ignorant of their history, put it in a high school history book!

I had finally gotten the image out of my mind, until I wrote my column a few weeks ago about wearing my "Confederate hat" around town (November 28, 2018 Signifyin') and it all came back to me.

"It's Malcolm X," the young African American teenager responded to my question about what the hat represented.

Malcolm X? The Black liberator?

I was about to take the young student through an animated tirade on American history when another young student interjected and explained what the flag actually represented, and questioned why I—a community elder—was wearing such a vulgar image?

Her response and question immediately melted away my frustration and disappointment with the first sister's response to my question, but it didn't answer the pressing question the first young lady provoked.

What in the world are they teaching our Black children about American history? Or maybe the questions should be, what are they not teaching? And why not?

And let's not let their parents off the hook.

What cultural nourishment are they feeding their children about their heritage and history? Are they preparing their children for the "real world," the world beyond the urban streets? Are they providing their Godly gifts with a cultural foundation to stand upon?

As I was to learn, the confused and misguided young sister was a freshman at the northside charter school I visited while the knowledgeable sister was a senior.

Based on the curriculum and school agenda, by the time the freshman made it through her first year, she would be well versed in real American history, before and after the Boston Tea Party.

She would know why people of color were excluded from the American dream and that the cancer of racism is a dominant gene in the American DNA.

Equally important, she would be provided with critical thinking skills to navigate the "American experience," one that continues to treat people of color like chattel 242 years after the declaration of "their" independence. She will learn how to prepare herself for being profiled, discriminated against and the subject of generalizations and prejudices. She will also learn why. And when. And where. And maybe even the whatevers and howfors.

Equally important, students at the charter will discover who they really are, not the descendants of savage slaves, but instead the progenies of stolen African survivors; the pedigrees of the inventors of math, science and medicine.

Through their veins flow the blood of Nyame's true chosen, the first man and woman; the Hue-men beings from which all ethnicities were promulgated.

Sadly, I can't say that knowledge is awarded children in most public schools. They are, by design, fed a daily dose of half-truths, misinformation and sanitized trivia.

They won't be told, for example, that the great, inspirational and heroic founding fathers were also rapists and racists.

That Lincoln didn't free the slaves. Like Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson the "great emancipator" believed Africans were inferior, and how the government conspired to maintain a system of apartheid, including in education.

During a visit to North Division High School earlier this year, I engaged a group of students who didn't recognize my African medalion.

They admitted they were taught little about Black History, save for tributes for Martin Luther King, Jr. and Rosa Parks. They aren't taught who Frederick Douglass was (or is, if you believe his close personal friend Donald Trump), much less Martin Robison Delany or Marcus Garvey.

Indeed, the only other Negro history figures they were told about were the inventors, "safe" civil rights leaders and the handful of athletes who proved they were athletically superior.

Most could recite King's "I've been to the mountaintop" speech but weren't exposed to his letter from a Birmingham jail. And since they aren't informed of the contributions of Douglass, they obviously never read (if they can read) his anti-Fourth of July speech.

I'm not surprised at that travesty, because when I questioned a white ultra-liberal white North Division High School teacher about Black history, her knowledge bordered on being insulting, misinformed and dangerously offensive.

But I was relieved to learn she was an expert on Black History by virtue of her owning several pieces of African art. (Hey, that's what she proudly told me.)

I've reached out to school board members to learn more about what history books are used, but even without reading a single page, or attending a His-story class, I can guarantee it is a misrepresentation of true American and African history.

When I attended North, we were forced to read "His-story" books that represented our ancestors as happy-go-lucky savages who were "blessed"

Quarles & Brady to host MKE Fellows Holiday Luncheon

ALIVE Inc., announced recently that Quarles & Brady LLP will host the annual MKE Fellows Holiday Luncheon, Friday, December 21, 2018 at Q&B's downtown Milwaukee offices, 211 E. Wisconsin Avenue from Noon - 1:30 p.m. This year Wisconsin Lieutenant Governor-elect Mandela Barnes and Kevin Newhall of Royal Capital will address guests and attendees. Susan Lloyd, Executive Director of the Zilber Family Foundation, will also be honored for their long-standing legacy of support. This annual event brings together MKE Fellows' community of corporate supporters, special guests, and friends community-wide while the students are home for winter break.

"With such outstanding academic performances to acknowledge, and such an enormously bright future already in motion, there's no better time to bring the community and the students together to celebrate than during the holidays when they're home from school," noted John Daniels, III, President of the MKE Fellows. "Milwaukee is remarkably impressed by the academic performances and graduation statistics of the Fellows but even more so because that translates into the promise of future prosperity for the city and the state. Happy holidays indeed!"

At the luncheon, program students will interact with many friends and supporters. They will have an opportunity to meet newly accepted MKE Fellows and community partners who support the initiative while enjoying a delicious holiday tradition. In the past, Mayor Tom Barrett, former Lt. Governor Rebecca Kleefisch, former Milwaukee Buck Vin Baker, and many others have attended and mingled with the students. In 2015, the MKE Fellows dialed into the White House and a representative from D.C. provided words of encouragement.

MKE Fellows is a powerful youth leadership initiative offering support to academically talented African-American young men in Wisconsin ensuring they graduate from college prepared for career success. Since the inaugural class in 2012 made of 10 MPS students, the MKE Fellows has grown tremendously and now serves more than 150 youngsters from the Milwaukee community.

The MKE Fellows has far exceeded national graduation averages, establishing an astonishing 84% graduation rate! At this time every year, the students are on winter break and the MKE Fellows brings them together for the annual Holiday Luncheon. Community members and MKE Fellows will network and enjoy a festive holiday lunch and hear from several notable community and corporate leaders.

ACTS Housing Supports 2,500 Homeowners

It took one look at the home on N. 36th St. for Neva Gaines and her husband Robert to know the home was "the one." They saw move-in ready homes, but decided on the house despite the $35,000 rehab project ahead of them.

"I said this is it," Neva said. She said she couldn't pass up the French doors, built-in fireplace, or the intricate wall stucco. "That would be hard to replicate."

Since 1995, ACTS Housing has supported homeowners on their journey toward homeownership with financial counseling, real estate services, and home rehab counseling and loans. Homebuyers can opt to purchase through a bank or purchase a fixer-upper foreclosed home through the city.

With the Gaines' family purchase, 2,500 homeowners have successfully completed the ACTS program. Neva calls her home "a blessing." She and her husband Robert fell on hard times: a back surgery which led to a disability and made their renting experiences unstable. Her home, purchased through the ACTS Housing program, gives them a sense of stability.

"We have control over our lives, and it's a place to call our home," she said.

Steinhafels Furniture commends the Gaines family for their hard work and says working with ACTS is the perfect combination.

"Steinhafels is a family business, committed to helping families create the homes of their dreams," said Allison Steinhafel, ACTS Housing board vice president.
