KING FEST celebrates 90th birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. at Wisconsin Black Historical Society-Museum

Marquette Legend and NBA great Dwayne Wade saluted by school at Fiserv Forum

Former Marquette Golden Eagles star and star of the NBA's Miami Heat Dwayne Wade was honored at Fiserv Forum recently during half-time of the game between Marquette and the Providence Friars. Members of the Wade family were on hand, including Wade's wife, actress Gabrielle Union. Players from around the NBA and from Wade's college days were also on hand to celebrate this Marquette legend and definite NBA Hall of Fame inductee after he retires this season, his 16th. Wade played for Marquette from 2001-02 to 2002-03, and led the school to the NCAA Final Four. Mayor Tom Barrett presented a proclamation declaring the day "Dwayne Wade Day." The Golden Eagles beat the Friars 79 to 68.

TWO INCIDENTS INVOLVING A TERRIFYING SYMBOL OF AMERICAN RACISM SHOWS NATION IS FAR FROM ATTAINING DR. MARTIN LUTHER KING'S DREAM

ARTICLE COMPILED BY MCJ EDITORIAL STAFF

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character.—Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

In the month we celebrate the birth of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., two recent racial incidents in the Milwaukee suburb of New Berlin, and in Toledo, Ohio have garnered national attention.

Both incidents have two things in common. Both happened in a manufacturing setting. The other involved the most terrifying symbol of American racism:

A noose.

That alone is affirmation that, despite the 50-plus years since civil rights icon Dr. Martin Luther King uttered the aforementioned iconic words that helped push the nation closer to his dream, the nation has regressed significantly in the last decade, especially in the last two years of the Trump presidency.

The Original Black Panthers of Milwaukee recently held a news conference to voice its outrage over an incident at Denco Manufacturing in New Berlin last month where a white employee there allegedly turned a work strap into a noose.

He handed it to a Black Denco employee and told him to stick his head in it.

"Once again, racism has reared its ugly head in the city of Milwaukee and the Milwaukee suburbs," said King Rick, the leader of the Black Panthers during the news conference.

Though New Berlin police were called, no charges were filed or arrests made, and there will be no follow-up on the matter.

But Marlon Anderson, the Black "recipient" of the noose, is reportedly still reeling from the incident, for which he is now on administrative leave.

Anderson said he is now being evaluated by a psychologist "to see that I'm not going to hurt someone," adding he reportedly admitted to his boss he had been carrying a screwdriver in his pocket for protection ever since the occurrence.

New city health commissioner says lead abatement program is her department's top priority

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

Though Milwaukee's lead abatement program was on hold since last year, and the partial government shutdown has stalled the reinstatement of its funding, new city health commissioner, Dr. Jeanette Kowalik, stressed it's her department's top priority.

Speaking at the Milwaukee Press Club's Newsmaker Luncheon, where she answered questions from a panel of journalists, Kowalik said the lead abatement program was a first priority because of the disproportionate number of children and families suffering from lead exposure in Milwaukee.

UWM, MATC and MPS leaders share M³ collaboration's impact

Two years ago, leaders from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, Milwaukee Public Schools and Milwaukee Area Technical College publicly announced a groundbreaking educational effort called M³ (pronounced M-cubed). It's an unprecedented collaboration among Milwaukee's three largest public education institutions to create a better K-through-16 educational system, one that will feed the region's growing need for college-educated employees. Earlier this month, M³ leaders hosted an event highlighting the impact the initiative has had so far. UWM Chancellor Mark Mone, MPS Superintendent Keith Posley and MATC President Vicki Martin shared how M³ has helped increase the MPS graduation rate and the percentage of MPS grads going on to college. They also committed to accelerating the progress and to moving the needle in one area that has not yet seen growth: the one-year retention percentage for MPS graduates who attend either MATC or UWM. More than 130,000 students are collectively served by MPS, MATC and UWM. Through M³, educators work in teams to smooth transitions between the institutions and implement programs that benefit the entire student population. Curricula and instructional approaches in math, science and reading are being aligned throughout the three institutions. Research and resources are being shared, with an eye toward accelerating student progress from middle school to high school and on into college. Additional M³ efforts include combined professional development sessions for MPS, MATC and UWM faculty members. Trips to UWM and MATC campuses connect MPS students with educational avenues aligned with their career interests. Job fairs have introduced students to employers, and Parent Institute programs ensure parents have the tools to navigate their children's path to college. New city health commissioner speaks at Milwaukee Press Club

Kowalik admitted that in addition to funding, it has been difficult to find contractors who are able to replace windows with paint chips and other lead hazards in the homes. During the panel Q and A, Kowalik said the health department is looking to partner with organizations who are in alignment with the department's goals of economic security, inclusivity and fairness, as well as positive mental health in the city of Milwaukee. Asked for her perspective on the racial inequalities of Milwaukee's Black community, Kowalik expressed concern about the void of African American executive positions and leadership. She noted such systemic exclusion of Blacks often creates hostile environments where racial minorities become subject of daily microaggressions, unconscious bias, bullying, discrimination and other abuses. Kowalik added such negative work experiences can impact a person's physical/mental health outcomes and cause economic stress. She suggested the creation of a city-wide mentorship initiative that includes city departments and corporations that would re-empower the community. In addition, Milwaukee's corporate leaders must be more proactive in sustaining and promoting African Americans into executive leadership positions where they can shape better policy and more healthy work spaces.

LIGHTING THE WAY

What to Expect When Puberty Hits

Last week was intense! We talked about tweens and how the much anticipated time of their lives may be approaching; young adulting!

then she will definitely notice the change that is taking place.

Like I mentioned in last week's discussion, this may make her feel uncomfortable or insecure. If ever this is brought to your attention, there is nothing wrong with letting her know that she is totally normal.

Your daughter will soon begin to fill her body out and it won't be long before you see that your little girl, is slowly turning into a young lady.

One thing we have to remember is to make sure that this stage in her life is well supported and understood. Your daughter is more than likely feeling a little self-conscious about herself, so it is important that the feeling she has is not escalated.

The next change in your daughter's life will be her menstruation. Most girls get their periods two years after their breast begin to develop. At this age, it is not rare for your daughter to experience discharge. Girls will usually experience discharge that comes approximately six months prior to their actual menstruation. This stage in their life causes hormonal changing symptoms such as, backaches, cramps, acne, PMS, all the above!

As a mother, father or caregiver, if you think of a time when you experienced a challenging time in your life, it won't be so hard to picture what your daughter is experiencing. It is important to make sure that your daughter feels supported and most of all understood. Your relationship with her during this time will set the foundation for future changes to come.

Paishance Welch
Tweens, Teens and Young Adults.

Now, this may not actually be an anticipation of any parent or child, but as humans, we all know that this time is inevitable.

Things change, people change, times change and this will require much adjusting. So, now that we have discussed the big topic, "change," let's discuss the things that change in our tweens lives.

In our young girls, the ages between 10-12 are crucial. Physical changes and mental health changes begin to overpower even the slightest objection to body changes like estrogen being pumped into her body from her ovaries.

This estrogen overload tends to cause breast budding. Your daughter will soon begin to see small bumps around her nipples. After time, her nipples will get bigger, darker and even harder.

If your daughter is one that pays attention to her body on a regular basis,

WaterStone Bank Announces Partnership with Children's Hospital of Wisconsin

WaterStone Bank ("WSB") today announced a new partnership with Children's Hospital of Wisconsin. For each Moola Moola Kids Savings account that is opened in 2019, WSB will make a $10 donation to Children's Hospital of Wisconsin.

"Children's Hospital of Wisconsin is one of the nation's top pediatric facilities. WaterStone Bank is proud to partner with them in the mission to make Wisconsin kids the healthiest in the nation," said Doug Gordon, WaterStone Bank president and CEO.

Women and children are one of the bank's four target areas of charitable support, which is why it's so fitting that WSB partners with Children's Hospital. Giving to Children's Hospital of Wisconsin helps ensure that children receive outstanding care regardless of their economic standing, providing hope and healing to the children and families in their care.

"We are so grateful for WaterStone Bank's efforts to raise funds for Children's," said Christine Baranoucky, vice president of engagement & stewardship, Children's Hospital of Wisconsin Foundation. "We rely on the generosity of individuals, organizations and corporate partners to provide kids with the very best care.

Every dollar makes a difference and supports all of the extra special things that help us wrap around families to ease and prevent the suffering of children.

This includes providing care and counseling for siblings, expressive therapies that help kids and families relax and cope with long hospital stays and research to explore new and better treatments and eventually eradicate disease."

Surgeon General Advisory Targets Youth E-Cig 'Epidemic'

The nation's doctor is calling for an aggressive approach to keep children from using the tobacco products.

By Katelyn Newman, courtesy of USNews.com

U.S. Surgeon General Jerome Adams issued a rare advisory Tuesday urging local and state action to curb the "epidemic of youth e-cigarette use" in America.

"I do not use that word lightly," Adams said of the term "epidemic" during a press conference following the advisory's release. "Now is the time to take action. We need to protect our young people from all tobacco products, including e-cigarettes."

The advisory was issued a day after the release of a government-funded survey of American students that showed while use of more traditional tobacco cigarettes remains at or near all-time lows, the percentage of high school seniors who reportedly vaped nicotine in the month prior to the survey had nearly doubled in a year.

Citing separate research, Adams' advisory says "more than 3.6 million U.S. youth, including 1 in 5 high school students and 1 in 20 middle school students, currently use e-cigarettes." To a developing brain, nicotine exposure can "impact learning, memory and attention" as well as "increase risk for future addiction to other drugs," the advisory says, noting the devices also can deliver substances like marijuana.

"The use of multiple tobacco products puts youth at even greater risk for addiction and tobacco-related harms," the advisory says. "But any e-cigarette use among young people is unsafe, even if they do not progress to future cigarette smoking."

The advisory is the second of Adams' tenure as surgeon general and follows one issued earlier this year urging wider accessibility of the drug naloxone, which can reverse an opioid-related overdose. Before that, the last surgeon general advisory was issued in 2005, on alcohol use during pregnancy.

The latest advisory singles out Juul e-cigarettes. Sales of the devices - which resemble USB flash drives - surged by some 600 percent from 2016 to 2017, and the advisory says a typical Juul pod "contains about as much nicotine as a pack of 20 regular cigarettes." According to The Associated Press, the California-based company said in a statement it is "committed to preventing youth access of Juul products."

While the sale of e-cigarettes to people under 18 is illegal under federal law, Adams' advisory calls on states and communities to take steps such as "including e-cigarettes in smoke-free indoor air policies, restricting young people's access to e-cigarettes in retail settings, licensing retailers, implementing price policies, and developing educational initiatives targeting young people."

The notice also includes information and resources for parents, teachers and health professionals about how each can play an active role in curbing e-cigarette use among teens.

Last month, the Food and Drug Administration announced moves to restrict the sale of flavored e-cigarettes and its intent to ban menthol in traditional cigarettes. At Tuesday's press conference, FDA Commissioner Dr. Scott Gottlieb said his agency, among other measures, would be "stepping up our enforcement activities when it comes to the sales of these products to children."

"It's my belief that we've been successful in this country at stigmatizing tobacco use among kids," Gottlieb said. "Kids recognize that using combustible tobacco products is unhealthy and wrong. We haven't had the same success when it comes to e-cigarettes, and we need to reverse that."

PERSPECTIVES

QUOTE OF THE WEEK:
“Darkness cannot drive out darkness; only light can do that. Hate cannot drive out hate; only love can do that.”—Dr. M.L. King

A new way we can celebrate Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.’s big day!

A young relative once rejected my invitation to visit my church positing that most Sunday morning services were merely entertainment for which you pay an admission fee disguised as tithes or offering.

He said he would rather give to the poor and needy directly, and worship God on his own.

Several people over the years have used a similar analogy about the Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday celebrations, noting that people of various ethnicities supposedly come together on that one day of the year designated as a commune of brotherhood but after taking in the entertainment and political rhetoric, retreat to their isolated and segregated enclaves where they will only provide lip service to the drum major’s segregated dream.

While I do see a unique link between the church and the King celebration, it is not one built on entertainment, but instead of a sacred connection to a spiritual pathway to the Promised Land spoken of in scripture and reinforced by the eloquent words written by hypocritical founders of this country in 1776.

The bond that ties the two together was forged by civil and human rights leaders like King and it included a Biblical scripture that explained that prayer without works was ineffectual.

That the hour from 10 to 12 p.m. on Sunday mornings is the most segregated 90 minutes in America speaks to both the hypocrisy of the church and of the Christian calling for universal brotherhood. But it does, ironically, fall among the freedoms provided by the U.S. Constitution, including the freedom to associate and live among like-minded people of your choice and to voice even the vilest of idiotic views.

It does not, however, provide any group the authority to deny rights or opportunities to others.

Thus, King’s crusade, as both civic leader and cleric, was not so much about forcing relationships (you can’t legislate attitudes or integration), but about Christian values and—equally important—our rights to live, work and assume full citizenship without obstacle or hinderance.

Thus, the link between Sunday (or Saturday) religious services and the Monday commemoration (vs. celebration) are linked in a spiritual sense that political sponsors of the King holiday probably didn’t fully appreciate.

That being the case, I think we should declare henceforth that we will replace the King holiday with a Weekend Commemoration and Celebration of Wisdom and Welcoming (we can shorten the title as we achieve some semblance of unity).

Obviously, we must designate Martin Luther King, Jr. as the centerpiece of the weekend activities. We would just have to expand our discussion and evaluation of his life beyond one or two superficial stanzas of his ‘I Have A Dream’ speech.

For those who don’t recognize Saturday as the true Sabbath, that weekend day should kick-off the weekend activities, celebrating the civic and religious value of diversity and friendship, if not miscegenation.

Let everyone dance around the anvil (no twerking please) as we symbolically unshackle the chains of stupidity and ignorance that consist of the damaged cells that feed the man-made cancer of bigotry.

Let us all sing songs like “We are the World,” and “Amazing Grace,” and let the children take center stage with speeches by King and others whose shoulders he stood upon.

It would also be appropriate if they read the Constitution and those amendments that supposedly gave people born in this country full and equal rights unencumbered by profiling, discrimination and prejudice.

On Sunday, we should hold one national worship service in which we all sit side by side with interlaced arms in public parks from sea to shiny sea.

In any event, both the weather and logistics would undermine that possibility.

That being the case, let’s visit plan “B.”

Let the churches, synagogues and temples focus their services on their respective teachings of the creation theory--- the roots of mankind-- and God’s true vision for us. If their scripture condones racism or has drawings depicting Hitler and Jefferson Davis sitting next to God floating on clouds of cotton, I suggest they abandon that denomination and join another. And if I’m wrong, I welcome an address in hell next to Donald Trump and Con-y’all West.

Assuming that will be a quick analysis, I suggest all religious entities focus the rest of the service on King’s “Letter from a Birmingham Jail.”

Indeed, intrinsic in King’s letter were concerns offered by the man whose shadow King stepped out from under (no not Gandhi): Frederick Douglass, who 100 years prior questioned whether the church was complicit in the slave trade and resulting creation of American apartheid.

Let the church justify its complicity and its unwillingness to address social justice issues over the decades, or to at least exorcise the demons held by the parishioner named Jim Crow.

And Monday? How do we transition from holy day to holiday?

Ah, I got one for that one too:

I suggest keeping schools open on the King holiday and have them focus the entire day on a King lesson plan that covers all of the fields of study.

The Physical Fitness class can examine the kinetic energy and physical attributes of the marchers who joined King and other leaders (yeah, believe it or not, King was not the only civil rights leader) around the country to “stamp” out injustice or to guarantee the right to vote, unimpeded by bigots and bigotry.

Let the phy-ed teachers stress the importance of good reflexes for those who marched into the face of adversity and bigotry, bobbing and weaving to avoid the rocks and bottles thrown at them.

Strong legs were required to get to their appointed site of protest, and of course, strong neck muscles were important to absorb the blows of bigots and cops.

Of course, special training would be necessary to slow the effects of whiplash from turning the other cheek.

For biology, let the teacher explore the universal lie of White Supremacy that undermines the unsubstantiated concept that there are multiple races (with the so-called White “race” at the top of the food chain).

The truth, in case you were taught differently, is that there is but one race, and it originated in the Motherland.

Anthropologists called the remains of the first human being (or would that be Hue-man) Lucy (we would have called her Lucille, or Luwanda...nah, maybe Monique). Her remains were discovered in the Motherland. And it was from the seeds Nyame (God) planted there that all other ethnicities—or tribes—originated.

The math lesson for the day could offer a problem on how much is owed the descendants of former slaves for the free labor of their ancestors.

Or maybe, how much in reparations should the government now pay for the uncashed check King talked about.

Let the seniors tackle the problem of how much we are owed in reparations based on the cost of a mule and 40 acres of fertile land in 1865. Add in the compound interest and a few dollars for emotional distress.

The civics class can focus on how and why the government denied rights to people despite the guarantees of the 13th and 14th amendments, a question King repeatedly asked.

And what lessons have we learned about the power of the people to effect change amid political adversity, unjust laws and corrupt law enforcement. Were marches and prayer vigils effective? What about the boycotts?

Obviously, the history lesson must analyze and educate on the civil rights movement of the 1960s, but it should also review the 400 years leading up to those tumultuous days.

Let’s take a serious look at the concept of manifest destiny that was used to exterminate the native population, the system of slavery and how the so-called “founding fathers” justified apartheid while calling themselves liberators.

Let’s study the impact of Jim Crow and how the government destroyed the Black nuclear family and infested our community with drugs to maintain a status quo that benefits the few at the expense of the many.

Allow the teachers to provide a true history lesson on African contributions to the world ranging from our introduction to science, math and medicine. Let the students marvel at the resiliency and strength of a people who survived the worst form of slavery known to mankind, and still contributed like no other ethnicity to the evolution of this country and its resources.

Finally, spend some time reading between the lines to discover why many of us are still in chains today, are victims of self-hatred and low self-esteem. Was there a strategist called Willie Lynch? And if not, who orchestrated this historic tragedy?

It will probably take a few generations for my Weekend Wisdom project to effectuate King’s penultimate goal, but that’s a far shorter time span than relying on a Monday celebration, once a year.

And who knows, with this accelerated timetable, maybe the grandson of my relative will find himself in church sitting on a bench next to an Asian, Mexican and good ole boy from Georgia.

Our Future Depends On It

The great debates shouldn’t only be about when or by who, a child was raped. These tragedies can be prevented from ever happening again, in our communities.

Many of us may not know a child predator personally, but we see things that are not supposed to be happening and look the other way. Some of us are outspoken victims and the others have kept these unwanted incidents to themselves.

Isn’t it the duties of the adults to protect and not prey on the children?

Whether it be a family member, neighbor, stranger or pimp. Child exploitation has got to stop. These sad experiences have a lifetime of negative effects.

For some, the first cycle of irreversible trauma is when a child becomes an adult and some of the hurt and pain remains.

It doesn’t pass and it’s worse when no one seems to help the person.

Learn to block the horror with acceptance and with no revenge against the world.

Many believe that what happened, happened because of themselves. We must do better with protecting those we openly pronounce as our future.

UWM, MATC and MPS leaders share M³ collaboration’s impact

Milwaukee Campus, M³ leaders shared the early results with legislators, businesspeople, families, faculty and staff.

“Education is power,” Posley said. “This is transformational work.”

Success is being tracked through key metrics. That includes the MPS four-year graduation rate, which rose from 58.2 percent for the class of 2015 to 62.2 percent for the class of 2017. Final 2018 numbers are expected to rise another few percentage points.

M³ has also helped increase the percentage of MPS graduates entering college within one year from 44.2 percent for the class of 2015 to 46.2 percent for the class of 2017. The initiative helped boost the percentage of MPS students completing the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) from 60.8 percent in 2016 to 74.6 percent by 2018.

Higher targets for all figures have been established for 2019-20, and leaders outlined specific steps to help more MPS students succeed when they enter college. Sixty-five percent of MPS students continue after one year at UWM and 44 percent continue after one year at MATC.

“We will not rest,” Martin said, “until our students are successful at the level they deserve and our community needs.”

Two UWM students spoke about the impact M³ has already made on their lives. First-year student Mawah Kromah, who plans to major in education, talked about the support she received at her MPS high school — James Madison Academic Campus — and the summer bridge program that helped her graduate from high school and enter college.

Pilar Olvera, a senior in sociology and urban studies at UWM, said that campus organizations such as the Roberto Hernandez Center, which is dedicated to serving Latino and Latina students, contributed to her academic success and set her on a path to graduation. “UWM helped me every step of the way,” Olvera said.

Mone said that working in public education is a calling, and he emphasized “how important it is to transform lives and create opportunities for individuals.”

M³ is playing an important role in those efforts. “I’m proud of the work we’ve achieved,” Mone said, “but we have much more work in front of us.”

Two incidences involving a noose evidence the nation is far from attaining Dr. King's dream

Three hundred, thirty-four point eight miles away in Toledo, a similar incident happened, except it was a culmination of earlier racist actions against Black workers at a General Motors' powertrain plant in that city. Eight Black employees at the facility recently filed a lawsuit against the car manufacturer accusing plant managers of doing little to nothing to stop the racist comments, slights, and threats in a hostile workplace. How hostile? The accounts read like a news story from the bad old days of the Jim Crow South...except it was in the north...in Ohio...in 2018 that these incidences took place. The Black litigants complained of bathrooms being for "whites only," Black supervisors were denounced as "boy" and ignored by their subordinates, Black employees were called "monkey," or told to "go back to Africa." Black employees at the GM plant were warned a White colleague's "daddy" was in the Ku Klux Klan, and White workers wore shirts with Nazi symbols underneath their coveralls. One Black male supervisor said when he reported the racist slurs and insubordination to his superiors, he was told to deal with it himself and "counsel" the workers who use the slur. The Black supervisor said he took upper management's inaction to mean he should be glad he was at the plant, to just "deal with it." The Black workers also noted there was a coded language to talk about them, according to the lawsuit. White employees would call all the Black employees "Dan." They learned later "Dan" was an acronym for "dumb ass (N-word)." There were also violent situations Black employees had to deal with that upper management did not address. Said the Black supervisor, Marcus Boyd, highly placed management and union officials work together to protect people who are White. "It was like being at war," Boyd reportedly said. Another worker, Derrick Brooks, found a noose hanging in the area where he regularly works one day. He believes it was put there to intimidate him because he was the only Black employee on his shift working when he found the noose. Eventually five nooses where reportedly found by Black employees at the plant. Because of the "underlying atmosphere of violent racial hate and bullying," the employees filed their suit. As what generally happens when business owners and upper executives are confronted by accusations of racism within its businesses, Denco Manufacturing and GM either denied the charges or claimed they took the allegations "seriously" and are committed to creating a safe and inclusive workplace where all employees are "respected" regardless of race, gender, age, sexual orientation, or religious belief. The aforementioned is what Denco reportedly said in response to the incident with Anderson. The company said it contacted and cooperated fully with the police investigation while conducting one of its own. Not surprisingly, neither entity found any evidence of wrongdoing, that it found "regrettable" a "troubling misunderstanding occurred." Denco also stressed the alleged behavior has "no place at our company," and that as they move forward, they will "conduct a formal review of our policies and will reaffirm our expectations of all employees." "We care deeply about the well-being of all our employees. However, we are obligated by law and company policy to maintain their confidentiality." The alleged perpetrator has been moved to a different shift from Anderson. As noted, no further disciplinary action was cited in the New Berlin Police report. Like Denco, GM also released a statement of mia culpa. The car manufacturer reportedly stated everyone with the company is expected to uphold a set of values that are "integral to the fabric of our culture." "Discrimination and harassment are not acceptable and are in stark contrast to how we expect people to show up at work," the statement read. The statement continued: "We treat any reported incident with sensitivity and urgency, and are committed to providing an environment that is safe, open and inclusive. General Motors is taking this matter seriously and addressing it through the appropriate process." The car manufacturing company would not address the lawsuit on the record after publishing its statement. The union at the plant denied that any of its practices were discriminatory. Dennis Earl, local president of the United Auto Workers (UAW), reportedly said: "Union people protect employees no matter what race, ethnicity." However, an investigation of other complaints by the Ohio Civil Rights Commission found GM allowed a "racially hostile environment," with one investigator saying it's one of the worst cases of racist behavior she had seen. Though GM claims to have taken appropriate action, the Ohio civil rights investigator said they found just the opposite. One example came from a former union president's testimony. At a meeting to address the placing of nooses a white supervisor bemoaned "too big of a deal" was being made. That same supervisor reportedly went on to say, "There was never a Black person who was lynched that didn't deserve it." Both Boyd and Brooks have since left GM, taking jobs that pay a lot less and returning to school to prepare for other careers. Racist incidences continue to happen at the GM

Toledo plant. And the company hasn't identified who was responsible for the nooses, and claim it has an on-going and extensive anti-discrimination, anti-harassment initiative at all its plants with the cooperation of the union. Milwaukee Panther leader King Rick wonders why there hasn't been any outrage from Black elected officials and community activists who he calls "fake?" "You pick and choose what you are upset and angry about," King Rick said in a Facebook posting about the Denco incident. He added Black leadership has been as quiet and church mice. "Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter." —Dr. King

...the Black press is a form of communication that is vital to our community because Black newspapers...Black media in general...highlight the positives within Black America that, sadly, don't get shown by the majority run media outlets that dwell on the negatives of our lives.
