Legendary Johnson Publishing Company files for bankruptcy

Johnson Publishing Company, the historic African-American media powerhouse responsible for the start of Ebony and Jet magazines, has filed for bankruptcy. The company sold Ebony and Jet three years ago to a private equity firm, so Tuesday's filing for Chapter 7 bankruptcy liquidation will not affect the publications, the Chicago Sun Times reports. However, the company plans to sell the rest of its assets, which include Fashion Fair Cosmetics. As the Wall Street Journal reports, the decision to liquidate came after failing to restructure, obtain alternative financing or find a buyer, Johnson Publishing said in a news release. "This decision was not easy, nor should it have been," the company added in announcing the move, the Sun Times reports. "Johnson Publishing Company is an iconic part of American and African-American history since our founding in 1942, and the company's impact on society cannot be overstated." Tuesday's filing marks another turning point for the firm begun in Chicago in 1942, when the late John H. Johnson started the company with a $500 loan and the goal of presenting positive, aspirational images of African Americans to the world.—Source: TheRoot.com

New York man charged with threatening to kill Rep. Ilhan Omar

A New York man is in custody after having been arrested and charged with threatening to assault and murder Rep. Ilhan Omar, according to the US Attorney's Office for the Western District of New York.

Patrick W. Carlineo, Jr., 55, of Addison, New York, threatened to kill Omar because of her Muslim faith, according to a criminal complaint and accompanying affidavit. Omar, a Minnesota Democrat, is one of the first two Muslim women serving in Congress after being elected in the 2018 midterms.

A call was placed to Omar's Washington, DC, office on March 21, an FBI agent stated in the affidavit. During the call, an individual, who identified himself as Pat Carlineo, said to a staff member: "Do you work for the Muslim Brotherhood? Why are you working for her, she's a (expletive) terrorist. I'll put a bullet in her (expletive) skull."

Omar's office referred the threat to the US Capitol Police, which began an investigation with the FBI.—Source: CNN

Black conservative Candace Owens blasts House Judiciary Committee hate crimes hearing

Controversial Black conservative activist Candace Owens was critical of a hearing on hate crimes and White nationalism by the House Judiciary Committee Tuesday. Testifying at the hearing, Owens accused the committee of "fear-mongering" rather than trying to address racism.

"The hearing today is not about White nationalism or hate-crimes, it's about fear-mongering, power and control," said Owens, expressing skepticism over whether or not hate crimes have risen in America in recent years.

"We're hearing [terms like 'white nationalism'] sent around today because what they want to say is that brown people want to be scared, which seems to be the narrative that we hear every four years ahead of a presidential election," Owens said, according to The Hill.—Source: thegrio.com

Those wiley, doggone, darn cats!

Few cat owners would be surprised by the conclusions of a new study that confirms their "feline friends" possess the ability to discern various words including their names, but simply choose to ignore their "masters" when called.

That's one of the reasons why I have never "owned" a cat, preferring dogs, although I haven't had one since my first marriage ended.

(Oops, that didn't come out right. I meant to say my first wife and I had a dog, but she passed—the dog—and several years later, my wife and I had an amicable divorce for totally unrelated reasons. I ended up with my son, and would have taken the dog too, but as I said, she passed away before the Stephen King book Pet Sematary).

PASSAGES Former columnist Greg Stanford remembered as a trailblazer and mentor

By Thomas E. Mitchell, Jr. Greg Stanford, a former columnist at the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel, and a founding member and first president of the Wisconsin Black Media Association, will be remembered as a mentor and trailblazer who opened doors for Black journalists.

Stanford

Stanford died recently after a long illness. He was 72. Current and retired Black journalists called their colleague and friend a voice for the city's Black community; as its advocate who wrote stories that spoke to their challenges living, working, and raising a family in a hyper-segregated metropolis struggling with race and racism.

"He was in a unique position to advocate," said Mikel Holt, columnist and associate publisher of the Milwaukee Community Journal. Holt remembered that Stanford started—as most Black journalists in media did back in the day—with the Black press, more specifically—

Grimes-Johnson has spent 36 years at the agency as a domestic violence advocate. At the celebration, it was estimated she was a lifeline to at least 30,000 women and children through the years and the ripple affect of her work included 100,000. Grimes-Johnson was acknowledged for making Sojourner more than just a shelter, but a home for those in the midst of a crisis. ## Former columnist Greg Stanford passes at 72

(continued from front page) cally the Milwaukee Star-Times, a Black weekly newspaper and precursor to the Community Journal. Holt said he and Stanford would often do similar topics in their columns and call each other to compare notes afterward or just to talk issues and journalism.

"He would say the same thing I would say (as it related to covering Black issues) and get attacked by White readers, while I—writing for the Black press—wouldn't because my audience was Black. He was a little jealous of that." The MCJ associate publisher recalled Stanford saying to him he was fortunate to be able to work in the Black media where he didn't have to worry about his articles being "edited" to reflect "alternate facts" as it related to such particulars as the number of Black people participating in a protest march. Holt said such methods by the mainstream (white) press reflects the fact that newspapers—and the media in general (the Black press admits it has an agenda in the way it writes)—have secret agendas as it relates to how the powers-that-be were portrayed in newsprint or on television news at six and 10 o'clock. "Greg cherished his days working for the Black press," Holt noted. "He laid the foundation for my work in it."

Stanford would also, at times, express his frustration to Holt about being one of the few Black journalists on the staffs of the Journal and its one-time rival, the Sentinel.

"People don't know how much racism he had to endure at the Journal," Holt said. "He would get letters from racist White readers baiting him and calling him all sorts of racist names. But he never gave up."

"He had a lot of courage to endure what he endured. For a long time, he was the lone voice writing about Black folks (in the mainstream press). He was a mentor to James Causey (a Journal Sentinel columnist who knew and worked with Stanford).

"You could see the influence Greg had on James because James' writing style is somewhat similar to Greg's writing."

"He was a brilliant warrior." MCJ Publisher Patricia O'Flynn Pattillo, who knew Stanford going back to his Star-Times days, called him a "solid man and a superb writer" who was "a devoted, impassioned foot soldier for justice."

"I shall long appreciate his willingness to journey with us when love of change empowered his every thought. He will be missed and his legacy shall long endure."

Causey, who met Stanford when he was a 7th grader at Jackie Robinson Middle School at its career week and caught the writing bug listening to his future mentor talk about his passion for writing, called his friend in a lengthy Facebook post, "a major influence and supporter."

"Throughout my journalism career Greg has been there for me with words of wisdom and encouragement," Causey wrote. "When I lost my father five months ago, he was one of the first people to express his condolences to me."

Bully Me Not!

I woke up this morning and saw a post on my Facebook timeline about an 11-year-old girl who committed suicide after being bullied at school.

When I went to search the little girl's name online, I came across a slew of teenage suicides that were the end result of school and cyber bullying.

Before I knew it, my morning was filled with stories and images of little boys and girls who lost their lives to a rapidly growing epidemic of teen bullying.

This is something that children seem to take lightly. They may never expect that their words and actions could be the very thing that end a peer's life.

Last week, we spoke about how peer pressure and social media can be a negative influence on the teenage mind. We learned that self-esteem issues stem from an array of things like social media, negative friends and in this case, bullying.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, over 14 percent of high school students have considered suicide, and almost 7 percent have attempted it.

It has also been noted that bully victims are between 2 to 9 times more likely to consider suicide than non-victims, according to studies by Yale University. In addition to that, another study in Britain found that at least half of suicides among young people are related to bullying.

It has been said that bullying typically spikes in the 6th and 7th grade. During this time period, it's seen very often because children are attempting to find where they fit in.

While wanting to be a part of something is often seen as normal behavior, when it comes to establishing a place in these teens' situations, fitting in may be at the expense of another child's peace of mind and mental stability. In return, this can lead to possible suicide.

If you suspect your child is being bullied or is the one doing the bullying, it is important that you try your best to get to the bottom of what's going on.

Talk to your child about how dangerous it could be if they handle being bullied the wrong way. Never take any threat or suicidal comment lightly. Get your child immediate medical help.

If you suspect your child is doing the bullying, talk to them and see if they are troubled.

They may be experiencing emotional turmoil and don't know how to express it positively. If this is the case, seek professional help. Your efforts as a parent or guardian can save a life.

Greg Stanford

—James Causey

Causey said when he finished a fellowship at Harvard University in 2008, Stanford was retiring from the Journal Sentinel's editorial department.

"When he retired, he told me that it was my time to become the community griot. When I came back to the paper, I told them there was only one job that I wanted. Greg's job."

Another retired Journal and Journal Sentinel colleague, Eugene Kane, in his Facebook post about his friend, called Stanford: "the golden standard for Black columnists—any columnist really—in Milwaukee and set the bar for anyone who attempts to have the same impact with their words.

"I knew Greg for more than 30 years, from my first days in Milwaukee. I saw him as the 'Dean of Black columnists' and when I started writing a column, there was no better example to follow.

"He was a friend and a colleague and someone I respected."

After his retirement from the newspaper, Stanford started the Ayzha Fine Arts Gallery. He continued to give back to young people by judging writing contests and awarding scholarships.

Funeral services for Stanford will be held Sunday, April 14, at 2 p.m. at Wisconsin Memorial Park "Chapel of Chimes," 13235 W. Capitol Drive. He will lie in state Sunday 1 p.m. at the "Chapel of Chimes" until the start of the services. Visitation is Saturday, April 13, from 3 to 7 p.m. Family will receive guests from 6-7 p.m. at Northwest Funeral Chapel, 6630 W. Hampton Ave.

Atlanta Archbishop Wilton Gregory becomes first African American to lead D.C.'s Catholic Archdiocese

In the wake of the child sexual abuse scandal that has rocked the Catholic church, Pope Francis has named Atlanta archbishop Wilton Gregory to lead the Washington, D.C. archdiocese on Thursday, making him the first African-American to hold the position.

The appointment of Gregory, 71, comes after former archbishop Cardinal Donald Wuerl, submitted his resignation in October after being linked to the child sexual abuse scandal.

According to the Associated Press, Wuerl was implicated in covering up abuse by a Pennsylvania grand jury report which claims that he protected child molesting priests. Wuerl's predecessor, Theodore McCarrick, was also implicated for reportedly sexually abusing minors throughout his career. In February he became the first cardinal to be defrocked for abuse.

"This is obviously a moment fraught with challenges throughout our entire Catholic Church, certainly, but nowhere more so than in this local faith community," Gregory said at a Thursday press conference in Washington. "And as in any family, challenges can only be overcome by a firmly articulated resolve and commitment to do better, to know Christ better to love Christ better, to serve Christ better. I would be naive not to acknowledge the unique task that awaits us."

The AP noted that Gregory may have been a top contender for his support of Pope Francis' progressive direction for the church. The Chicago native headed the U.S. bishops conference after it adopted a "zero-tolerance" abuse policy in 2002. Gregory supported Francis' vision while heading the archdiocese in Atlanta since 2005.

Despite his track record, Gregory has not been able to escape controversy himself. The AP reports that in 2014, the Atlanta archdiocese was accused of using $2.2 million in donations to buy and renovate a new home for the archbishop. He would later apologize and the mansion was sold after public outrage.

But with experience having handled a scandal of his own, Gregory has won praise and many are confident that he will be able to handle the crisis in the church, while Pope Francis continues to work toward reform.

"Gregory has impeccable credentials for dealing with the sex abuse crisis, which is essential for healing the church," the Rev. Thomas Reese, an expert on the American church, said in a column for Religion News Service on Thursday.

The Rev. James Martin, a leading author and Jesuit priest, said in a statement that Gregory was a "superb choice" and is "someone who knows how to reach out to marginalized populations."

SIGNIFYIN': Those doggone, selfish, snobbish cats: They're more human than you think!

searcher (I read about it in the Wall Street Journal—yeah, I read both sides), most Felis Catus (that's a house or kitty cat...OR another name that we can't use in this paper because it is also a slang term for a particular area of the female anatomy that if I write it will get me on the "#me too" hit list) can distinguish sounds, including nouns, and know when you're calling or scolding them.

But like President Donald Trump when asked to reveal his tax returns, cats make a conscious choice to "ignore you," sometimes with a smirk on its face that borders on arrogance.

Research by Atsuko Saito, a psychologist at Sophia University in Tokyo, reveals cats are a supercilious breed of animal, and very good at hiding their emotions, unless you tick them off. Or neglect them. Or admonish them.

Then they can be very vindictive (that's why your drapery was torn up a day after buying them a cheaper brand of cat food).

I've observed several people's cats in their home environments and as a result never entertained the thought of "adopting" one myself. Without exception, I view them as pompous, snobbish, self-serving, sneaky and irresponsible.

In fact, I go so far as to refer to them as the pimps of the animal kingdom.

They do nothing but eat, play, cozy up to you for affection and "accidentally" spoil your carpet.

They also give little in return. Kinda like some politicians I know.

In fact, when I read the research conclusion that cats comprehend what you say, but act like you were speaking Chinese, it brought to mind SEVERAL politicians I've observed over the years.

The research revealed that if you watch cats closely enough, there is some tell-tale sign that they actually hear and understand you. With politicians, it's a little harder, since they are masters at rhetoric and misdirection. And if cornered, they will simply blame the other major party, or provide some garbage about how they can relate to our pain and suffering.

In fact, the more I ventured into the research, the more I concluded that there's a lot of similarities between a Felis Catus and a Partisan Political...uh...that word—which begins with a "P" but I can't use in this family newspaper you're holding (cat).

Try this test: Ask a Democrat if they support reparations for the survivors of slavery and apartheid, and I can almost guarantee you'll get the same reaction you would if you called your cat by his name while it was playing with a dead mouse (note the symbolism).

In fact, ask them—politicians or cats—how they would resolve any of the myriad problems stagnating the Black community: unemployment, segregated housing, and poor government schools—and their response will be a feline smirk, their eyes will either roll up in their sockets, or they will stutter as they give you something most would identify as "cat do-do."

Of course, politicians are not the only creatures with cat traits. Ask teacher union president Amy Mizialko how that organization's disingenuous (and deceitful) campaign to replace the majority of MPS board members with union pacifiers will benefit Black students, and you would think you were talking to Garfield the Cat at mealtime.

Or, Mizialko (the same "progressive leader" who dissed Michelle Obama a couple of weeks ago after declaring Black folks shouldn't be allowed to run a predominantly Black school) will give you some catnip about Black children can't learn because of poverty, the murder rate and dysfunctional family structures—which is an indirect way for missionaries and liberals to call your mothers whores, and thus unable to make decisions for themselves.

Giving teachers more money, and blocking the charter school doors won't close Milwaukee's nation leading achievement gap between Black and white students, but it will insure job security for teachers, which is why the district was created, was it not? Or at least that's what both my childhood mentors Tom and Sylvester told me.

There are some, who would swear many preachers possessed cat traits as well.

Now that I think about it, the new research brings to mind some peculiarities of those prosperity preacher pu...uh...kitties, who drive up to their mega churches in their quarter million-dollar cars to sell insurance to poor congregants who they promise will get their reward in the "next life."

BUT, only if you pay their insurance premium on Sunday morning. The cost is 10% of your meager income. That's gross, not net.

Ask the pimp—err, pastoral pu...uh, you know—about Matthew: 19-24 (about it being easier for a camel to fit through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to get to heaven) and I guarantee your question will be met with that cat-like look of distraction or disdain, if they don't change the subject to a discussion about the meek inheriting "Trump's" earth.

To be honest, most men I know (even if we say a dog is a man's best friend) have a little pus...uh "pud-die" cat in us as well. You know, "cool cat," "black cat," etc.

And I'm not without a few of their attributes either.

When my wife asks me to do something that's interrupting the ballgame, or interferes with my plans, I act like I don't hear her. The same trait surfaces when she asks me to go shopping.

But that doesn't mean I prefer cats over dogs. Dogs make for better companions, they will fight for you, guard your house and wake you up if the house is on fire or Snoopy Doggy Dud is on television.

Which is not to say I'm ever going to adopt another one. Indeed, after recently reading civil rights and health icon Dick Gregory's latest book, I've sworn off all four-legged pets.

Written before his death in 2017, Gregory's book, "Defining Moments in Black History: Reading Between the Lies," is an eye-opening series of essay that touch on a variety of topics ranging from his relationship with civil rights stakeholders to unmasking "His-story-cal" distortions.

In one section he hypothesizes that family dogs, whether we call them adoptive family members, pets or man's best friend, are in reality slaves. Yes, slaves, as in property, servants or our captured ancestors who were treated like dogs (pun intended).

Gregory said we can control the dog's freedom of movement, we don't pay them for their service (guard duty) and we put chains around their necks when they are "allowed" to venture outside our personal plantations (homes.)

Call them what you will, but if you used that description without explaining who or what you were talking about, the innocent observer would think you were talking about a slave.

You can't use that analogy for a cat. That furry creature of mystical power (according to the ancient Egyptians) on the other hand, will fight if you put a collar on it, give you nothing in return for his "service"—which has yet to be defined—and ignores you when you call or try to train it to pick cotton.

That doesn't leave me with many options for four-legged companions, unless Simba wants to visit.

But, there's always fish. Just not catfish—unless it's on a plate and smothered in hotsauce.

Celebrate Positivity Through Life

Why is it that we can work throughout our lives to accomplish things that only truly become recognized after death? Our mission to bring togetherness for betterment shouldn't be allowed to only happen after someone dies or is killed.

If someone's death does have a direct impact on others' lives, how do we use it positively and not just momentarily.

If we use it momentarily, how do we use it so that we build in the present, for the future? Doing this without waiting on a funeral or a vigil, or these often darken celebrations?

I watched the thousands come out to support the bro Nipsey Hussell.

I did not know of him but listening and reading his story, I was and still am impressed, because I know that sacrifice of life for a life is deeper than many are willing to comprehend and I believe it's not respected much as it should be.

In life, we must stop celebrating death more than we do living. Some of us have even began labeling children legends.

We must stop making the excuses for the killing of each other only to turn around and question how dare the others for killing a brother. In the hood, there is no such thing as getting hit by friendly gun fire. If we are supposed to be our brother's keepers, the protectors of the women and children, then we need to become the first responders while working directly towards prevention—Peace
