By Mikel Holt
Much to the dismay of critics of the Milwaukee Parental Choice Program (MPCP), a new independent study reveals students participating in the program enter and graduate from four-year colleges at much higher rates than their public school counterparts.

In the third-to eighth-grade group, the study found a similar percentage enrolled in four-year colleges (50% for MPCP and 45% for MPS).

More revealing was that there was a 38% higher probability that an MPCP student would graduate from their chosen four-year college.

The results of the research can be linked to superior SAT college entrance scores for MCPC students.

African American students enrolled in private schools under the program scored a full point higher than their public-school counterparts, thus better preparing them to meet the challenges of college.

Students attending non-instrumentality charter schools (schools where teachers aren't represented by the Milwaukee Teachers Education Association [MTEA], the union that represents MPS teachers) in Milwaukee scored two points higher on SATs, consistent with the statewide average.

The college graduation study comes on the heels of several other studies, which show participating schools in the choice program have a positive civic and academic

College has created a fund to help its graduates get a leg up by helping them offset the burden of student debt.

The funding initiative, called the "Morehouse College Student Success" program, was established by the famed HBCU's Board of Trustees. It gifts graduates with greater financial freedom and gives them a launchpad for success in the real world. The fund will also allow grads the opportunity to pursue advanced degrees and build wealth. The funding initiative will solicit donations that will be earmarked for reducing or eliminating Morehouse alumni student loan debt.

A Pennsylvania appeals court recently questioned why lawyers for actor/comedian Bill Cosby, who is serving a 10-year prison term for drugging and molesting a woman at his home and was the first celebrity trial of the "#MeToo" era, didn't get an immunity agreement in writing, and approved by a judge when accuser Andrea Constand first came forward in 2005 with the allegations. One of three judges on a panel hearing the appeal, theorized Cosby's lawyers didn't pursue the agreement because they knew the trial court wouldn't have allowed it. Cosby's lawyers argued the actor relied on the promise before giving testimony in Constands' suit that proved incriminating when it was unsealed a decade later.

Olympic gold medalist Simone Biles recently tumbled and flipped her way to a sixth national championship, breaking records and making history with out-of-this-world moves. She became the first female gymnast to land two new moves in competition during the U.S. women's gymnastics championships. She did a double-double dismount (a double twist and double somersault) on the balance beam, making her the first person in the history of the sport to perform such a move. She made history again two days later when she landed a triple-twist, double-flip move in her first pass on the floor exercises. AND Biles made history for a third time by tying Clara Schroth Lomady for the most national titles, which was set in the 1950s.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:

"With a large number of Brewers pitchers on the injured list, do the Brewers still have a chance at a Wild Card playoff spot? Why or Why not?"

"Never say never! But right now it looks shaky. If the Brewers start winning every game from today on, anything is possible!"

DALE JONES

"I love coming to the Brewers games so, therefore, I am with the Brewers all the way. It doesn't look good, but I am not giving up on them."

SHERLET JONES

"I am a die-hard Brewers fan until the end. With a lot of good pitching, we can make it to the Wild Card."

TARIQUE JONES

"This is my first Brewers game and I am going to say I hope the Brewers make the Wild Card. They deserve it. I will be back."

Back-to-School Health Check List

By Dr. Michelle Graham, senior medical director, UnitedHealthcare of Wisconsin

August marks back-to-school season, an ideal time for parents in Wisconsin to help improve their children's health. Before schedules become packed with classes, homework and extracurricular activities, here's a back-to-school "health checklist" to help give children a better chance to succeed inside and outside the classroom:

Get a Comprehensive Eye Exam
About 80 percent of what children learn is through their eyes. With that in mind, a child's first comprehensive eye exam should occur before age 1, again at age 3 and before entering school.[1] If no vision issues are detected, school-aged children should have an exam at least once every two years.

Also, a school's vision screening is not a substitute for a comprehensive eye exam, as screenings can miss conditions such as poor eye alignment, focusing issues and farsightedness.1

The inability to see clearly can affect a child's physical, emotional and social development, which in turn can affect academic and athletic performance. Children often don't complain if their vision isn't normal, so it's important to look for possible signs such as squinting while reading or watching television, difficulty hitting or catching a ball, or headaches when watching 3D movies.

Also, be aware of digital eye strain, which is caused by prolonged use of computers or smartphones. Help your child practice healthy vision habits by keeping computer screens at least 30 inches from their eyes, resting their eyes every 20 minutes and blinking frequently to avoid dry eyes.

Get a Dental Cleaning
Maintaining proper oral health matters more than just keeping a sparkling smile – it's also important for good overall health. This is especially true for children, as untreated dental problems may diminish attention, decrease self-esteem and limit a child's ability to learn at school.[2]

Tooth decay is largely preventable, yet it ranks as the most common chronic disease among children. About 33 percent of young kids (ages 2 to 8) have cavities in their baby teeth, and 20 percent of kids in the same age group have cavities in their adult teeth.[3] With that in mind, parents should schedule regular dental exams every six months, especially at schools that require a back-to-school dental checkup.[4]

For parents with teenagers, it is important to recognize the risks of opioid addiction, especially after wisdom teeth removal.

If you or a loved one is prescribed an opioid following a dental or other medical procedure, ask your health care professional if there are alternatives, including over-the-counter pain relievers such as a combination of acetaminophen and ibuprofen.

Get Recommended Immunizations
Many schools in Wisconsin require that children are properly immunized before they enter the classroom to help to avoid serious diseases and prevent other students from contracting them. Children's vaccines are 90% to 99% effective and may help protect kids from diseases such as mumps, tetanus and chicken pox.[5] By helping reduce the risk of contracting potentially preventable diseases such as the flu, children may have fewer school absences.[6]

Parents should check with their doctor to determine what immunizations are appropriate based on age. Most shots are given by the time children are 2 years old, but some are administered into the teen years. If your child runs a low-grade fever or has swelling in the shot location after the immunization, these minor side effects typically last a couple days. Apply a cool, wet washcloth on the sore area to help ease discomfort, but check with your doctor about the appropriateness of over-the-counter pain medications.

Back-to-school season is an exciting time for many children and their parents. Consider these guidelines to help encourage your child's health and success throughout the school year.

impact on students, and the African American community. One study showed a decrease in segregation because of the program, and yet another revealed a $475 million economic benefit from the MPCP.

Ironically, those affirmative study results come several months after Governor Tony Evers attempted to stop the growth of school choice in the state, using his budget proposal to dismantle the program, despite its popularity.

The Republican-controlled legislature derailed his efforts.

Leading up to the new school year, over 40,000 children now participate in the "voucher and charter" programs, the overwhelming majority of whom are African American and poor.

Evers, the former superintendent of the state Department of Public Instruction, has worked closely with the state and local teacher's unions to force those students back into public schools, many of which have been categorized by DPI's rating system as failing.

The MPCP is nearly 30 years old. It is the brainchild of the late State Rep. Annette Polly Williams (D-WI) who sought to empower Black parents by providing them with educational options for their children.

Williams was a staunch critic of what she called educational apartheid in the city.

Former MPS Superintendent Robert Peterkin originally authored the MPCP. Williams' proposal was rejected by the assembly but resurrected by Williams a year later.

Army of Ministers Lead House-to-House Canvass on Milwaukee's North Side

Central City religious leaders from diverse denominations mobilized voters for Nov. 6

More than 40 Ministers from City of Milwaukee churches convened at Canaan Missionary Baptist Church - 2975 North 11th Street - to hold a press conference before they launched a massive canvass door-to-door effort.

Ministers and members of their congregations knocked on every door in an 80 square block area urging people to vote on November 6 and leaving literature on where and when they can vote.

According to Rev. Greg Lewis of St. Gabriel's Church of God in Christ, "Our people must use their votes as a megaphone to call for jobs, health care, police accountability, safe streets and quality schools."

"Our people must use their votes as a megaphone to call for jobs, health care, police accountability, safe streets and quality schools."

Our community has been severely damaged by the devastation caused by the political leaders that have ruled in 2018. It is an educating people and our voting Black members and we believe it is up to us to change the future.

The canvass went south from Chambers Street to North Avenue.

South to the Parks is a network of Churches building a generation of voters in 2018.

PERSPECTIVES

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

“I was BORN to make mistakes, not to FAKE perfection.” —Rapper Drake

FAMILYTIME/OPINION

At the end of the day, don't we need more Black parents like Will and Jada?

Although people have criticized the celebrity couple's parenting skills, seeing how Jaden and Willow Smith turned out, it now seems that there's something about their family to emulate

By Blue Telusma

posted July 9, 2019

A few years ago I remember reading a scathing New York Post op-ed entitled, “Any reasonable parent would be ashamed of Will Smith’s kids” and in the piece, author Kyle Smith (no relation) reads Will and wife Jada Pinkett-Smith the fifth on what he believed were their incredibly lacking child rearing abilities.

“We don’t know for sure that Will and Jada Pinkett Smith are the most horrible parents on Earth. But the case for that seems strong when you consider their überentitled, brainless, self-adoring, twaddle-spewing little munchkins,” twaddle-spewing little munchkins.”

“These kids are nuclear narcissists. The elder Smiths may have boycotted the Oscars because they weren’t nominated, but they boycotted parenting because they couldn’t be bothered to raise kids with any grounding in reality.”

Clearly Kyle Smith is not a fan of this family with which he shares a name. But while it may be easy to dismiss the opinions of a 53-year-old white man about what Black parenting should look like, the truth is, around the time that post was written in 2016 many Black people on social media were saying the exact same thing.

We (as a collective) called the Smith kids weird and rolled our eyes at them as they mused about history, science and metaphysics.

Old school folks were irate that the children weren’t spanked and actually allowed to voice strong opinions. Conspiracy theorists were convinced they were being raised in a Scientology institution surrounded by other cult members. And when Jaden decided to start wearing gender neutral clothing, the homophobes and misogynists — both male and female — lost their minds.

We may applaud Jada as a mother now that Red Table Talk is a bonafide hit and cultural phenomenon, but let’s not get amnesia and forget that it was just a few years ago that many of you were hinting not so subtly that she was barely raising her own kids.

Yet after all that smack talking, three or so years later, when Willow has grown into a beautiful and articulate young woman with the emotional intelligence of a healthy 40 year old, and Jaden is out here bringing water to the residents of Flint, Mich., faster than the government and erecting free mobile restaurants to feed the homeless community in Los Angeles — I can’t help but ask myself, “Do we need more Black parents like Will and Jada?”

And before anyone speaks up with that tired and dismissive response of, “Well if I was filthy rich, I could raise my kids like that too,” let me stop you. That statement is a lazy cop out because there are plenty of rich people whose families are still a hot mess, and dare I say it, the most impressive parts of the Smith’s parenting philosophies don’t cost a penny.

Let’s start off with the fact that they chose not to force the gender binary or most other limiting societal norms down their kid’s throats.

Your child is still their own person

Many Black people are raised by parents who they know are going to probably be more strict with them than the guardians of their white school mates.

Black mothers and fathers ask a million questions, demand to see receipts and are quick to give out side-eyes when “one of your little friends” seems to be involved in some shady business.

To be a Black parent means to navigate the world as if you have trust issues. And historically speaking, that has always been a prudent practice. It has been widely acknowledged at this point that Black children are often not seen or treated as children and are subsequently targeted and disciplined at rates much higher than white children who exhibit the exact same behaviors.

But somehow while not trusting society, we also stopped learning how to build trust with our children as well.

This is a trapping of parenthood that often creates relationships where instead of avoiding dangerous activities, Black children just learn how to lie to their families about who there — be it directly or through lies of omission. And the next thing you know, that kid grows up to be a 35-year-old adult complaining to a therapist about how they’ve never been able to confide in their parents.

The Smiths are far from perfect (honestly, who isn’t?) but one thing even their biggest critics have to admit is that the open dialogue that they’ve cultivated with their children is exceptional.

Case in point, just last month during an appearance on Jimmy Kimmel Live! Pinkett Smith revealed that Red Table Talk would be exploring the topic of polyamory in an upcoming episode, and shared that her daughter Willow booked the guests due to a personal interest in the topic.

“It’s a throuple that Willow was actually following on Instagram,” Pinkett Smith told E News. “That’s how it all came to be. She became very curious about this whole polyamory thing.”

Kimmel then asked the 47 year old if a polyamorous relationship was something that Willow might be interested in pursuing, to which the actress responded, “Possibly. I don’t know. Listen, she’s 18...who the heck knows what’s going to go down.”

Lets take a moment to really marinate on that moment. Can you imagine how much more fulfilling the lives of so many of us would have been if we had parents we could sincerely come to with that sort of thing without fear of being shamed, disowned or even worse?

There are literally Black children running into arms of the unknown just to escape the oppressive expectations of mothers and fathers who are too busy wagging their fingers to open their eyes and acknowledge who they’re really raising. The fact that the Smith children have never had to deal with the crippling weight of that sort of trauma is reason in itself for parents to consider taking a page, or maybe even a paragraph from their book.

Put your own safety mask on first

Aside from the freedom that Will and Jada have given their children to discover themselves, another thing they’ve been accused of doing is allowing their children to be “selfish.” Back in the day, no critique or slander against the Smiths ever seemed complete without someone making a quip about what “spoiled brats” the A-list couple was raising.

In our community we seem to give out gold stars for people who play martyr and put everyone ahead of themselves.

We applaud women for enabling their men and building up their self esteem from scratch while receiving nothing in return. We tell men to not be “soft” and suck up their feelings in order to uphold the standards of stoic — and at times toxic — masculinity.

We repeatedly tell ourselves, and our children, in millions of little ways, to de-prioritize their own needs for “the greater good” even if it means completely ignoring their own gut instincts.

Then after generations of that we wonder why mental health issues, anxiety disorders, and stress related ailments such as hypertension are still rampant in our community. It doesn’t take a rocket scientist to see that there are direct correlations between our normalized unhealthy coping behaviors and the physical and psychological symptoms we exhibit because of them.

But just like when you’re in an airplane the flight attendant tells you that you must put on your own oxygen mask on first before seeking to help any other passengers, the Smiths have somehow taught their children the exact same thing about self care.

The reason why Jaden Smith at just 21 is such an amazing and thoughtful philanthropist, is because as a child he was empowered to be amazing and thoughtful towards himself, first.

He was told to explore what worked for him and what didn’t. He was encouraged to figure out how he felt about things and focus on what really mattered to him despite what others thought. And as a result, once he became an adult, his own sense of worth was so stabilized, he had a surplus of compassion left over to extend to others. And that compassion is literally now feeding and providing relief to whole communities in desperate need of resources.

That’s not a spoiled rich kid story, its a universal statement on humanity and what happens when we guide our children without overzealously squashing their dreams. How can anyone, especially in our current political climate, not see the value in raising more kids who navigate the world this way?

I think all those people who set up those “The Smith kids are weird as hell” message boards back in the day, officially owe Will and Jada an apology. The world tends to mock what it doesn’t understand, but in this case, the results speak for themselves.

Tribute To My Dearly Beloved Alumna Howard University Sister: TONI MORRISON!

Today my heart is heavy, filled with mixed anxiety, and grief
My beloved alumna sister, Toni Morrison, is now in relief
Read about her, as I entered the halls of Howard University
Where she attended, graduated, and taught as a professor
She had a mission and vision, one of God’s great successors
She changed the landscape of African American literature
As an editor at Random House, she encouraged creators
Angela Davis found inspiration in her words as an author
Embracing her own unique self and cultural poetic voice

Stokely Carmichael also emboldened by her, made his choice
Gracing Newsweek’s cover, with great success many prayed
Winning the National Book Critics Award, she was on her way
“Song of Solomon” made many realized she was here to stay
First female author to win the 1993 Noble Prize, she was no play
Now my beloved sister has another journey and has gone away
Such an internationally acclaimed visionary force with her pen
Receiving the Presidential Medal of Freedom, 2012, back then
She touched many heart and souls, people called her a friend

Her legacy is here to stay for many to embrace and commend
My beloved sister, has completed her journey leaving dividends
In grand style she moved on to another phase in another journey
The sting has been removed from her soul with a smile of peace
The Creator has another place for her and with outstretched arms,
Saying, “Well done great and faithful daughter. You have taken little and turned it into many for others—Welcome Home!”
