SDC Hosts Community Event to Address Substance Abuse and Mental Health

According to recent studies, the impact of the coronavirus is pervasive. Children are worried for their families' safety and stability. They are disappointed that they can't see friends or play sports. Some struggle with distance learning or worse.

In addition, a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) survey highlights the serious psychological and emotional impact of the Coronavirus pandemic for Americans from all walks of life.

The CDC survey shows increases in the following areas when compared to the previous year:

- Anxiety disorder symptoms (25.5% versus 8.1%),
- Depressive Disorder (24.3% versus 6.5%).
- Started or Increased Substance Abuse (13.3%)
- Suicidal Thoughts (10.7% versus 4.3%)

To help young people and their families better connect with mental health and substance abuse resources, The Social Development Commission is kicking off its "Rise Above the Influence" campaign.

SDC will host a variety of activities. As part of this campaign, middle school and high school students have an opportunity to use art and poetry to creatively express their feelings about substance abuse and mental health issues. With the contest over, winners will be announced and publicly recognized at this event.

Here is a list of related community events.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—A national poll of state and local employees finds that African American workers are more concerned than their colleagues about the potential health and economic impacts of COVID-19.

During times of crisis, crucial information about your community comes from local reporters.

Access to high quality information is essential. Especially local information. And especially now. What's happening in our communities? What's the impact? How are our local leaders responding? For answers to these questions, we rely on the hard work of our local reporters. As a result, readership of local news outlets has reached record highs.

But due to COVID-19, most local news publications are losing money, fast. Advertising has plummeted during the crisis and readers aren't subscribing fast enough to fill the void. This has led to thousands of local reporters being laid off. Just as our society faces numerous, urgent challenges.

Millions of people are in danger of losing access to the authoritative local information they need to stay informed.

That's why the National Newspaper Publishers Association and the National Association of Hispanic Publications are working with local news providers to build a strong future for local journalism. And that's why our long-time partner Google is purchasing ads like this in local publications across the country, as well as providing a Relief Fund to help struggling local news outlets. But those actions alone aren't enough. Please consider supporting the local news organizations you rely on. Subscribe to them. Donate to them. And if you have a business that's able to, advertise with them. Your support is critical to sustaining the dedicated journalists serving your communities.

BLACK STATE & LOCAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES HAVE HIGHER CONCERNS ABOUT HEALTH AND FINANCIAL RISKS OF COVID-19

state and local employees expect to take on more debt in the next year. By comparison, 22 percent of all other survey respondents say they anticipate taking on more debt. Debt already is a problem for 69 percent of African American state and local employees, as compared with 53 percent of all other survey respondents.

These findings are contained in a new infographic from the Center for State and Local Government Excellence (SLGE) and ICMA-RC, African American State and Local Employee Views on COVID-19.

This research is a supplement to a wide-ranging analysis of state and local employees' views detailed in the recent report, Public Sector Employee Views on Finances and Employment Outlook Due to COVID-19.

Despite their worries, the research finds that African American respondents are more likely to express positive feelings while at work as it relates to serving their communities during the time of COVID-19. Forty one percent said they feel grateful, and 23 percent are optimistic. For all other survey respondents, 31 percent indicated they felt grateful while 14 percent felt optimistic.

"As millions of state and local workers remain on the frontlines of the COVID-19 pandemic, our research indicates that African Americans see higher health and financial risks. This may correlate to the greater incidence and virulence of COVID-19 among Americans of color," said Gerald Young, SLGE senior research associate.

"Also troubling is that even before the pandemic, 41 percent of African Americans working in state and local jurisdictions did not have emergency funds set aside for unexpected expenses. Yet, despite these challenges, African Americans are feeling less anxious and pessimistic than their fellow workers," Young noted. "We hope this research helps state and local employers with workforce management programs, especially as jurisdictions grapple with employee wellness, recruitment and retention during these trying times."

Additional findings from the infographic are summarized below:

African American respondents were most likely to work in education (27 percent) and health and human services (23 percent). Nineteen percent work in administrative positions, while 13 percent work in public safety.

African American respondents were more likely than others to indicate that they are extremely concerned about the impacts of the pandemic on their retirement plans (27 percent).

Thirty-nine percent of African American state and local employees are worried about keeping their family safe from contracting the virus, as compared to 23 percent of all other survey respondents.

Sixteen percent of African American workers are concerned about a reduction in job hours, as compared to 11 percent of all others.

Also, 13 percent of African Americans polled are concerned about job loss, versus seven percent of others surveyed.

Twenty-three percent of Africans Americans surveyed expected to spend significantly less than normal during the next year.

Thirty-eight percent of African Americans in state and local government are working remotely. Prior to the pandemic, 15 percent worked remotely to the same or to a greater extent than they do now.

Twenty-seven percent of African American state and local employees strongly agree that the pandemic has made people more aware of the importance of their work, as compared with 14 percent of other respondents.

African Americans represent 18 percent of the U.S. state and local workforce, and state and local governments employ about 19 million workers. This research is based upon a survey of 1,008 full-time state and local government employees conducted by SLGE and Greenwald & Associates from May 4 through May 20, 2020. The final data were weighted by gender, age, household income, and industry type to reflect the distribution of the state and local government workforce as found in the U.S. Census Bureau's Current Population Survey.

The Center for State and Local Government Excellence (SLGE) helps local and state governments become knowledgeable and competitive employers so they can attract and retain a talented and committed workforce.

SLGE identifies leading practices and conducts research on public retirement plans, health and wellness benefits, workforce demographics and skill set needs, and labor force development. SLGE brings state and local leaders together with respected researchers.
