VOTING BY ABSENTEE BALLOT

Under Wisconsin law, voters do not need a reason or excuse, such as being out of town on Election Day, to vote absentee. Any voter who prefers to vote by absentee ballot may request one.

If you are not already registered, you will need to register to vote before an absentee ballot can be sent to you. A new voter registration application is required any time you move (even minor changes such as apartment units), change your name, or if you have not voted in the past four years.

Unless you are a military voter, permanently overseas, or are indefinitely confined, you must provide the Election Commission with a copy of your photo ID to keep on file. The address on the ID does not need to be current. For a list of acceptable photo IDs, visit BringIt Wisconsin.

Voters who are indefinitely confined (meaning they have difficulty getting to the polls due to age, illness, infirmity, or disability) may request a ballot be sent to them for every election by checking the box on the application. Indefinitely confined voters are not required to provide photo ID.

Deadline

Applications for absentee ballots must be received no later than 5:00 p.m. on the Thursday before the election.

Note for voters requesting a ballot within 10 days of the election: Because ballots must be received by our office (either delivered by mail or in-person) no later than Election Day, we strongly encourage you to visit an in-person absentee voting (early voting) location or request that your ballot be emailed to you.

If you are uncertain of your voter registration name, address or status, you can go to My Vote Wisconsin and select "Regular Voter" to look up your voter record.

The City of Milwaukee provides five (5) opportunities for completing and updating your voter registration: by mail, online and at any Milwaukee Public Library, at City Hall or at your voting site on Election Day. # UWM CHANCELLOR'S SPECIAL MESSAGE TO THE COMMUNITY

BY MARK MONE
CHANCELLOR
UNIVERSITY OF
WISCONSIN-MILWAUKEE

Chancellor Mone

We prepare. We partner. We produce. This has held true throughout UWM's history and it certainly won't change now, because this is exactly what Wisconsin needs.

The headwinds of 2020 are testing us all, and like you, UWM is braving them through nimble adjustments and resilience. Challenging times require collectively strong allies.

That's why I want to personally share a few reminders with you about why UWM is more important and relevant than ever.

Preparing students for success is at the heart of UWM's mission, but we do so much more. Our work is a fundamental component of an educated citizenry and a robust democracy.

We're an engine propelling the workforce toward today's in-demand jobs, transforming our graduates into talented, coveted employees. We are also a community partner cultivating the change our region needs, especially when it comes to diversity and inclusion. And we're researchers discovering solutions to societal woes, medical ailments, environmental challenges and industry inefficiencies.

Year after year, one of my highest honors as UWM's chancellor is congratulating the 5,000 students who graduate with degree in hand. They are engineers and entrepreneurs, nurses and teachers, and specialists in nearly 200 professions.

They join more than 190,000 fellow alumni, and 80% of them stay right here in Wisconsin, forming the backbone of our business community.

More than 10,000 UWM alumni already work for top regional businesses, and our new graduates stand ready to reduce the 40,000-employee shortage our region faces in critical fields.

We're a founding member of the Higher Education Regional Alliance, or HERA, which includes 18 colleges and universities that partner with a network of organizations.

HERA is dedicated to closing student achievement gaps, increasing degree completion rates and expanding the area's talent pool to meet its workforce needs.

I'm also proud to say UWM is the first four-year public institution to take the MMAC Region of Choice pledge, as well as the largest institution to do so.

In concert with dozens of other leading employers, we've promised to help reduce the prosperity gap between the Milwaukee area's white population and its Black and Latinx populations, which is, unacceptably, the widest among 20 peer regions.

By taking the pledge, we commit to a 25% increase in leaders and managers of color at UWM, as well as a 15% increase in employees of color by the year 2025.

This pledge aligns with one of UWM's guiding values: an embrace of diversity and inclusion. Our constant goal is to make UWM a radically welcoming institution for people of all backgrounds.

And yet, the countless voices in the Black Lives Matter chorus have crystalized the need for systemic change regarding racial inequity, so we've placed a renewed emphasis on being part of that change by leveraging our strengths of teaching and research.

We've held wide-ranging and selection processes, to enhance our hiring protocols.

We've also launched our Toward an Anti-Racist Campus initiative, which will award grants to faculty and staff for researching campus racial inequities and devising solutions.

These grants emphasize expediency and mandate that resulting programs be implemented by our Fall 2021 semester. I have full faith that this work will make a difference, because world-class research is part of UWM's lifeblood.

"IN CONCERT WITH DOZENS OF OTHER LEADING EMPLOYERS, WE'VE PROMISED TO HELP REDUCE THE PROSPERITY GAP BETWEEN THE MILWAUKEE AREA'S WHITE POPULATION AND ITS BLACK AND LATINX POPULATIONS, WHICH IS, UNACCEPTABLY, THE WIDEST AMONG 20 PEER REGIONS."

often-emotional campus dialogues with UWM students, faculty members and staff about the impact of racial injustice.

We're implementing mandatory anti-racist/anti-bias training beginning this school year for all faculty and staff, with plans to expand such training to students.

We're examining new administrative approaches, including adjustments to our recruitment and

The prestigious Carnegie Classification of Institutions of Higher Education recognizes UWM as one of America's top research universities, an honor bestowed on only 131 institutions nationwide.

In fiscal year 2020, UWM earned more than $62.7 million in research awards, including $45.6 million from federal agencies. That means cutting-edge, life-changing work progresses daily COVID-19 pandemic, UWM's researchers are providing key discoveries regarding its spread, its impact and potential treatments.

In closing, I offer my deepest gratitude to our dedicated faculty and staff, students and alumni, as well as our community friends and supporters.

You make all of this possible, and together, we all make Milwaukee stronger.

Rockwell Automation Bolsters Access to STEM Learning at Boys & Girls Club

New STEM-rooted spaces give kids access to experiential learning that translates into career skills

Boys & Girls Clubs of Greater Milwaukee, in partnership with Rockwell Automation, opened three new educational and recreational spaces that foster equity and access for youth at the organization’s Don & Sallie Davis Club on Milwaukee’s southside.

The all-new Makerspace provides youth with project-based learning in all areas of STEM. “We have learned that when STEM exposure is combined with engagement programming, new worlds open up to members, and these new pathways provide Club kids with dreams that might not have otherwise been imagined,” said BGCGM President and CEO Kathy Thornton-Bias. The hybrid classroom gives youth hands-on experience in science, technology, engineering, and math work that will help unlock their creative potential and give them tangible skills they can translate into success in their future careers. The bright, colorful space features SKETCH 3D printers and laser cutters, as well as ample new supplies to imagine, build, and create.

The Games Room has been upgraded to a digital recreation room rooted in STEM learning. Physically interactive video games reinvigorate the space, to welcome and engage youth, while keeping them physically active. The marquee features of the robust room include Heavy Ball, idance, a computer-controlled dance game; an Exergame Wall and an iWall which all combine gaming and exercise to develop cognitive and motor skills while promoting active lifestyles at the same time.

The Big Pals Room for 7-8 year olds has been transformed with contemporary furniture and filled with innovative STEM-based games and learning activities to inspire off-screen imaginative play and creativity.

Rockwell Automation has supported educational programming at BGCGM for decades. Because of their generous support, BGCGM is able to provide kids with a rich variety of STEM programming, including computer science and coding, technology and math, experiential learning opportunities, and participation in FIRST LEGO League. The project also includes capital improvements to Davis Club’s HVAC, security, and IT systems.

Good Karma Brands Launches 101.7 The Truth Radio for Milwaukee’s Black Community

Good Karma Brands is excited to announce the launch of 101.7 The Truth, a local radio home for Milwaukee’s Black community. 101.7 The Truth, which will launch in 2020, will feature local shows with authentic conversations about news and current events, a celebration of Black culture, information created by and for the Black community with an emphasis on empowerment, family, faith and community.

Craig Karmazin, Good Karma Brands founder and CEO said: “At Good Karma Brands, we believe every voice matters – but as the events of this past year unfolded, we realized there were under-represented voices that had so much to say and needed to be heard.

We believe there is a unique opportunity for us in Milwaukee to launch a station that can make a real impact across the city, and within our company.

I’m excited to see how the station grows and evolves and look forward to meeting the strong demand for compelling and targeted content for Milwaukee’s Black community.”

COMMENTARY: 2020 First Presidential Debate an Embarrassment for America

By Stacy M. Brown, NNPA Newswire
Senior National Correspondent
@StacyBrownMedia

American politics nose-dived spiraled and crashed and burned during what masqueraded as the first 2020 presidential debate.

“You’re a clown!” “Would you shut up, man!” “Everything you say is a lie.”

Those were just some of the barbs from Democratic Presidential Nominee Joe Biden who grew irritated by repeated interruptions by President Donald Trump at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland on Tuesday, Sept. 29.

Trump, who received a regular rebuke from moderator Chris Wallace, claimed Biden was weak and unintelligent.

“Don’t ever use the word smart with me,” Trump railed at Biden.

The president sunk even lower, making accusations that Biden’s son, Hunter, was “kicked out of the military – dishonorably discharged – because of drugs.”

Biden reminded the audience of a little more than 100 people – down from an anticipated 900 because of the pandemic – that Trump called fallen military members “losers and suckers.”

While Trump dared Biden to say, “Law and order,” Wallace opened discussions on race. “Are you willing, tonight, to condemn white supremacists and militia groups and to say that they need to stand down?” the moderator asked Trump.

“Proud Boys, stand back and stand by,” Trump reluctantly said in a declaration that fell well short of condemnation. “But,” Trump insisted, “I’ll tell you what, somebody’s got to do something about Antifa and the left.”

Biden also blasted Trump’s handling of the coronavirus.

The former vice president said more than 200,000 people have died, and some 40,000 people are still contracting COVID each day.

“The President has no plan. He hasn’t laid out anything,” Biden charged.

Trump responded that a vaccine and life-saving treatments might come before the election.

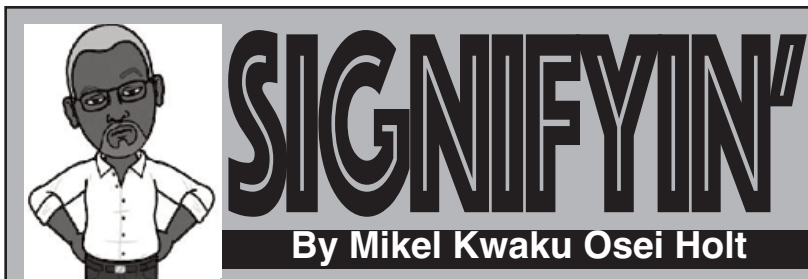

The president again hit out at China, blaming the Far East nation for the virus.

Still Walking Into A Strong Wind

Book chronicling the struggles for better education for Black students in the 1970s still relevant today

I was selecting books from my 200-plus collection for give-away Sunday, when I ran across Bill Dahlk’s historical epic ‘Against the Wind: African Americans--the Schools in Milwaukee, 1963-2002.’

Instead of being placed in my pass-along to the ‘ill-informed, brainwashed or confused’ box, Dahlk’s classic work quickly made a bee-line to the table next to my reading chair.

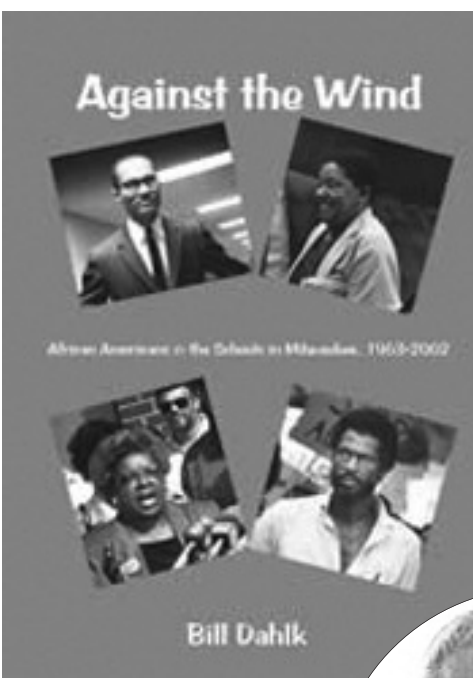

As I recall, when I first received an advance copy many years ago, I spent an inordinate amount of time completing the first chapter.

It’s not that I’m a slow reader, but more so because it’s one of those books where you scan through various chapters based on name and/or event references before settling down to read the entire essay.

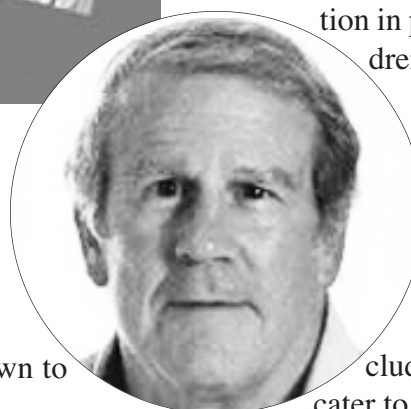

Moreover, since I’m featured throughout the nearly 700-page book as a reference and narrator of sorts, ‘Against the Wind’ provided a journalistic and historical sojourn for me then, as it does today.

What makes the book all the more relevant today is the socioeconomic and cultural evolution---or lack thereof---of Milwaukee’s educational ‘system of schools.’

We’ve seen a half dozen government school superintendents

since the book, each with promises to turn around the district. But for all intents and purposes, the abysmal scorecard for African American students has remained the same.

And in some cases, it has worsened.

School choice--educational options--has cemented itself as a legitimate alternative, as over the last two decades most of the mediocre schools--a majority of which were Black controlled or operated-- have been weeded out.

Latest research shows today, a signification percentage of private schools participating in the school choice program (there are no ‘choice schools’) are out-performing government schools on several levels—including higher graduation rates, significantly higher SAT test scores, college acceptance and parent satisfaction.

There’s even a study showing how African American students of participating schools are better citizens--a small percentage of whom commit crimes; more family oriented and civic minded, and spiritually grounded.

School choice has also been an economic boon to the city and our ‘Village,’ along with being the largest employer of Black para-professionals since the closure of OIC. Moreover, a significantly higher percentage of teachers are African American, in comparison to MPS.

Charter schools, led by non-instrumentality institutions, are the leading schools in the state. Two Milwaukee College Prep (MCP) schools are listed in the top five schools in the state.

Ironically, while MCP is chartered by MPS, the teacher’s union is opposed to it and seeking to have those charters cancelled (forcing the Black students to attend failing government schools).

More specifically, the local union, which has fought choice tooth and nail, has spent millions in resources to undermine the empowerment of Black parents who seek alternatives to MPS.

Coincidentally, during the period examined in the book, a report from a national teachers’ organization revealed that Milwaukee government school teachers led the nation in private school enrollment for their children. Talk about hypocrisy!

The real issue today, as it was when the book was written, is centered around finances and control of student mobility--product manipulation and resource, meaning teachers need the bodies to insure their profitability.

Masked behind all of the rhetoric, including that coming from Democrats who cater to the unions to insure their steady political support, is a reality that undergirds the battle: opposition to school choice (allowing parents the ability to make decisions without the dictate of Big Brother and his Mama) is the quest to control state resources. It is not now nor was it ever, about education; it’s about job security and MPS losing students.

And it’s about what and how the structure will educate--or as

THE COUNSELING CORNER

By Rev. Judith T. Lester, B.Min., M.Th.

World Smile Day is October 2,

Source for this column: “Smiley Face with Smiling Eyes” by Apple.com

In February of this year, I was asked to appear in a commercial spot on CW18/My24 Milwaukee for a marketing promo for a local newspaper.

A friend texted me by the time I arrived at the studio with a comforting word of encouragement and it was to simply be sure to “smile.” That text indeed put a smile on my face and is the inspiration for this month’s article.

In celebration of World Smile Day observed every first Friday in October, this month I am tying smiling to acts of kindness and spreading goodwill.

Psychology Today in an article entitled: “The 9 Superpowers of Your Smile” notes numerous researchers have already compiled a long list of the benefits of smile, but after research by the University of Missouri-Kansas City (UMKC), two more reasons were added to the list. Of the 9 Superpowers, I will present 7 here due to space restrictions. See full list at: <https://www.psychologytoday.com/us/blog/changepower/201605/the-9-superpowers-your-smile>

Let’s look at research on the benefits of the smile:

1. Smiling Can Make You Look Younger. The UMKC researchers tested the popular theory that smiling might cause others to perceive you as being younger than you actually are.

In a small study, college students perceived older people who had happy smiles on their faces as looking younger than their age.

The people with frowns on their faces were categorized as looking older.

2. Smiling Can Make You Look

Thinner. A young psychology student at UMKC found that sad faces randomized and flashed on a computer screen were judged to be heftier leaving one to only speculate that a mouth turned down in a frown might give the impression that a person is weighed down by unhappiness.

3. Smiling Elevates Your Mood and Creates A Sense of Well-Being. Behavioral psychologist Sara Stevenson wrote in a blog: “Each time you smile you throw a little feel good party in your brain.”

The notorious party animals, dopamine, endorphins and serotonin start whopping it up when you smile!

4. Smiling Induces More Pleasure In the Brain More Than Chocolate. According to Ron Gutman, the author of Smile: The Astonishing Powers of a Simple Act, British researchers found that one smile can generate the same level of brain stimulation as up to 2,000 bars of chocolate.

5. Even A Forced Smile Can Lead to a Mood Boost. While it is true that a positive experience is what makes us smile, it is also true that merely deciding to smile can provide positive experience.

6. Smiling Makes You Seem Courteous, Likeable and Competent. The first two qualities seem logical, but how does smiling make you seem competent? Perhaps, if you look sad or anxious, perhaps others wonder if you know what you are doing.

7. Smiling is Contagious! A smiling person can light up a room. If you like to help others and lift the spirits of everyone, just smile!

Beloved, even in the midst of a pandemic, we can find reasons to smile. Sharing a smile, giving and sharing kindness and goodwill are all gifts to be shared and is something we all can do. I hope this article has inspired you to smile and be open to sharing kindness and spreading goodwill to others. You will be surprised by the difference you will make in someone’s life! Source: 1 Meg Selig, The 9 Superpowers of Your Smile, Psychology Today, May 2016.

SAY WHAT! Republican Senator Ron Johnson and Democratically dominated Milwaukee Common Council agree municipalities should be able to count mail-in ballots early!

In a very rare show of bipartisan support, several Democratic Milwaukee alderpersons agreed with Republican U.S. Senator Ron Johnson's call for the state to allow municipalities to count mail-in ballots

Sen. Johnson

Johnson expressed his support for the change during a recent WISN-Channel 12 "UPFRONT" television interview.

Johnson stated he supported the state legislature passing a bill allowing mail-in-ballots to be counted prior to the November 3 election.

"I think we should change the law so the ballots can be counted well before Election Day, so that Wisconsin results are known by 9, 10, 11 o'clock on Election Day, so Wisconsin isn't part of the problem."

"We couldn't agree more with this sentiment," read a statement from 16 — undeniably surprised — members of the city's Common Council, who called on the Legislature to act on the matter soon and have Wisconsin join the dozens of states that already allow for early ballot tallying.

"Such a bill has already passed in the Assembly, but the Senate did not take it up before the session adjourned."

another site designated by the clerk. Dates and hours for early voting may vary, though it can begin no earlier than 14 days before the election and ends no later than the Sunday before the election. Please contact your municipal clerk for absentee voting hours.

If you have not previously provided a copy of your photo ID, photo ID must accompany your application.

Military and permanent overseas voters do not need to provide a photo ID with their request.

- By Mail: Download the Application for Absentee Ballot. Complete the form and mail it with a copy of your photo ID (if not previously provided) to: Election Commission, 200 E Wells St Room 501, Milwaukee, WI 53202.
- By Email: send an email (absenteeballot@milwaukee.gov) with a copy of your photo ID attached (if not previously provided). If you do not attach the Application for Absentee Ballot to your email, please provide the following information in the text of your email:

- o Your Full Name
- o Voting Address
- o Specific election for which you would like a ballot or if you are requesting for the calendar year
- o Mailing address (if it is different from your voting address)

- Online: applications can be submitted online at MyVote. This is the fastest method of request for indefinitely confined and military voters.
- Fax: you may fax your Application for Absentee Ballot to (414) 286-8445. Faxed photo IDs must be legible; we recommend lightening the ID on a copier before faxing it.

What if you are in the hospital?

Each hospitalized voter can request a ballot (in writing), and the voter may appoint an agent to pick up the ballot from the hospitalized voter's clerk's office. If you know you will be in the hospital, request a regular absentee ballot in advance.

The vote is sacred and partisanship should never get in the way of our elections.”

SIGNIFYIN’: Still Walking into a Strong Wind

Carter G. Woodson declares--miseducate our children.

The most defining period of my journalistic career--and what historians will call the crucial period of the civil rights movement in Milwaukee--occurred during the mid-1970s.

That decade represented one of the most defining eras in local Black history, shaping not only the direction of public education, but also the ideological chasm that continues to this day.

I was at the center of the storm that took us from educational apartheid, to the nonsensical panacea of desegregation (sold to us as integration and the cure-all for all of America’s social ills), to efforts to take over the district, and eventually school choice, in its varied forms.

This newspaper, established in 1976, was at the center of that storm, both through our advocacy and provision to be a forum for diverse ideologies, including a voice for a Black Nationalistic alternative.

We exemplified the motto laid out by Samuel Cornish and John Russwurm, founders of the Black Press, who declared, ‘we wish to plead our own cause.’

As such, we not only questioned the sincerity of those who sought to navigate the Freedom

Train but, when possible, exposed the resumes of everyone from the engineer to the porter.

The Freedom Train’s primary destination in the 1970s was to 50th and Vliet (MPS headquarters), but it had to navigate along a track that housed economic, political and cultural depots.

School desegregation was but the tip of the iceberg.

Underneath the surface were battles waged not just between the political and educational status quo, but also among African Americans of differing ideologies. Those battles pitted nationalists against integrationists, Africentrics versus assemblationists.

There were those who advocated that we control our own destiny, including all of its institutions, including those that educate our children.

On the other side of the track were integrationists, who believed in Martin Luther King’s vision of a just and colorblind society.

In between were pragmatists who viewed desegregation as a vehicle, education as the primary passport and empowerment as the manta---in whatever car that would get us there. Their motto was ‘no permanent friends, or permanent enemies, just permanent issues.’

In many respects, those sociocultural battles of the 1970s framed our current paradigm, as every group could claim short-lived victories.

The politically charged debate over a proposed mayoral takeover of MPS a decade ago, was in many respects the culmination of a 40-year battle over who was sincere about tearing down the walls of what some called a system of educational apartheid in Milwaukee.

Some leaders refused to accept any fundamental change, insisting that the system could be improved. They also rejected school choice, lamenting that it would drain resources needed for the change; whatever the hell that was.

In truth, there was some merit in both positions, but the underlying reality is that the divisions of the 1970s led us to the realization that Black progress is still an illusive dream and we’re too busy fighting dragons to notice that someone else is engineering our Freedom Train.

We were, and are, so busy fighting and chasing illusions, we haven’t noticed the train left the station without us.

Scanning through ‘Against the Wind’ sent shutters through my body as I reminisced about the journey traveled.

Much of what Dahlke details about the educational battle are chronicled in Daniel McGroarty’s, ‘Break These Chains’ published a 1996, which like my book, ‘Not Yet Free at Last,’ was censored and banned by educrats and missionaries who would like to rewrite history and maintain the status quo.

But Dahlk’s chronology provides an uncensored examination, if for no other reason than because he was considered neutral and carries credentials tied to UW-Milwaukee, and Cardinal Stritch.

He has taught both history and ‘His-story’ and has worked on this book for nearly two decades.

I had assumed that much of what Dahlk has concluded would be similarly analyzed in an insider’s perspective book by former MPS school board president Michael Bonds.

If truth is blind, Bonds would have assessed that the seeds that were germinated decades ago have grown into a dichotomous political forest that is as dense and confusingly dimensional as Shorewood Forest, complete with scripted Robin Hoods, Prince Johns and a devious sheriff. (You can figure out who plays which character.)

But Bonds never completed his book, finding himself facing a myriad of legal and ethical problems that derailed his career. The teacher’s union whose president he once directed to ‘go to hell,’ was ecstatic that Bonds has left the political scene.

SIGNIFYIN'

He was one of the few Black politicians, and board members, who advocated for educational options, and viewed his responsibility to all the children of Milwaukee.

What caught my interest immediately after opening Dahlk’s book, is that he opens the book with a ‘glossary of ‘leading’ actors.’

I immediately recognized most, including Lloyd Barbee, Jake Beason, Paulette Copeland, Rev. Kenneth Bowen, Father James Groppi, Larry Harwell and Polly Williams, the co-creators of school choice, and Lee McMurrin, former MPS superintendent and master public relations guru during the application of the school desegregation process in 1976.

And then there’s F. Marvin Hannah, Mike McGee, Leon Todd, Teju Ologboni, Clarence Parrish and Jessie Wray.

The contrast between the ideologies of those ‘stars’ provides a scriptwriter with ammunition to write a compelling, provocative storyline.

Consider the conflicting philosophies of Marilyn Morheuser, listed as a ‘White integrationist and program director of MUSIC,’ the principal organization supporting Barbee’s defining desegregation lawsuit, against the comments of former School Board President Lorraine Radtke who publicly declared her opposition to ‘desegregation’ because she theorized Black students were so uncivilized and uncultured they would urinate in water fountains at ‘White schools’.

There was Harold Jackson, the city’s second Black school board director who quit after declaring the district-maintained policies akin to South African apartheid as opposed to Police Chief Harold Breier who said he opposed desegregation because it would ‘bus crime across town.’

Oh, the good ol’ days, when issues were clearly defined, you didn’t have to guess agendas, and racism was overt and to the point. It was also easier to figure out who was friend, and who was enemy.

I have fond, and sometimes horrific, memories of many of the ‘actors’ whose roles set the stage for our current stage play.

Many are long since joined their ancestors, but they left indelible marks on local history.

Dahlk brings them to life, and for those of us who participated in that educational Black sojourn, recognize how even a tiny footprint in the sand can change the course of the mighty ocean.

You can also trace today’s Black high school drop out rate to events and individuals who directly or indirectly influenced the early timeframe chronicled by Dahlk.

You can assess the current state of race relations, the political pandemonium and even our economic plight to obscure events a half-century ago.

Following the trail illuminated by Dahlk will lead you back to circumstances that sparked a call for a separate Black school district, the school choice program and even a current proposal by North Division high school alumni to convert the school into a community-controlled institution, meaning an autonomous board would run it.

The 1960s was an era of dreams, while the 70s represented dreams deferred, and a period Black philosophical evolution.

In the 1970s we battled for and against school desegregation, were stunned when Black board members justified one-way busing, and were shocked when Federal Court Judge John Reynolds assigned a ‘special master’ to over the process.

That’s right, a special ‘massa.’

In the 1980s we reversed course and fought for Black control of the schools, and questioned who really was leading our struggle.

A bill for a separate school district was on the horizon as the school board proposed moving construction of a new North Division to 8th and Center so White kids wouldn’t have to venture into the central city to attend a medical dental specialty (they would get off the #80 bus two blocks away). African American neighborhood students would not be allowed admission to the school they fought to be built.

Some Black leaders began questioning whether sitting next to White children made Black kids smarter, or was the real agenda of the school board promulgated on the involuntary movement of Black students so as not to inconvenience Whites, and thereby avoid violent repercussion from the white community.

Soon came the realization that desegregation brought with it skyrocketing Black suspension rates (several Black children were suspended for carrying Afro picks to school—White teachers thought they were weapons) hostile teachers, who went on strike to avoid being reassigned, and baseball bat carrying White supremacists who threatened to beat up minority students who ventured from under the shadows of southside schools.

Desegregation did little to close the achievement gap.

School desegregation grabbed the headlines, but the battlegrounds of the 1970s morphed into civil war, not just between north (side) and south (side), but also over the direction of the civil rights movement, miscegenation versus Black empowerment, communal integration versus equality of opportunity.

When the smoke cleared, neither side was truly victorious for, as much as things changed, the more things remained the same.

Today, Milwaukee is still among the most segregated cities in the land. Black high school drop and achievement rates are in many cases worse than in 1960, and the Black poverty rate, at 40% in 1965, was 42% and climbing after Barack Obama left office.

MUSIC and Triple O, which fought each other over the direction of school desegregation, are no more.

Other organizations known by most by their acronyms, including PACE, NCIC, UBCC, KKK (not the racist group, but the King Kluster Konvention), CORE, CPS and BCC are all distant memories, although their role in defining the 1960s and 1970s remain with us.

Those groups are mentioned in a glossary of major and minor organizations in the prefix of ‘Against the Wind.’

I’ll reread the book as soon as I finish an amazing autobiography by Virginia Walden Ford titled: ‘School Choice, a Legacy to Keep.’

In many respects Ford’s journey to bring educational options to the worst school district in the country---Washington, D.C.---would be an excellent epilog to ‘Against the Wind.’

There is so much to relate to when reading about Walden’s crusade to bring school choice to the nation’s capital. Her battles against hypocritical or naïve Democrats is epic, and the teachers’ union and Black leaders funded by that special interest was reminiscent of what we continue to encounter in Milwaukee.

If nothing else, that narrative provides proof that our scenario is not unique. Progressive brothers and sisters around the country, whether fighting for educational options or against systemic racism—find ourselves walking into a strong wind. And worse still, those pulling on our pants legs are not just white.—Hotep.

Presidential Debate an Embarrassment for America

“We’ve done a great job,” Trump added, accusing the “fake news” of distorting his record on the virus. Trump claimed a Biden administration would have “lost far more people.”

Biden responded: “Get out of your bunker and get out of the sand trap and your golf course.”

Later, Trump again refused to say whether he’d leave office peacefully if Biden wins the election.

The ugly match further denigrated when the topic turned to Trump’s income taxes, which he has refused to release them publicly.

A New York Times investigation revealed that Trump had gone 10 of the past 15 years without paying any income taxes, and in 2017 and 2018, he paid just $750.

The president disputed the report but evaded Wallace’s questions about specifics.

As a successful businessman, Trump offered that he understands the tax code, and others who don’t take advantage of it are inept. Biden’s campaign released the former vice president’s 2019 tax returns before the debate, which showed he paid nearly $300,000 in federal income tax last year.

“You are the worse president America has ever had,” Biden told Trump.

Report Highlights Trump Voting by Mail Hypocrisy

Ahead of the 2018 midterms, tactics employed by these groups included hundreds of letters sent to state and local officials, threatening lawsuits if they did not undertake massive, aggressive "purges" of voter rolls.

Despite Trump's claims that voting by mail leads to fraud, both his son Donald Jr. and daughter-in-law Lara

Trump recorded robocalls in April urging mail votes for a Republican congressional candidate in a special election.

Right-wing propaganda about chaos and fraud at the polls is having an impact: In August, a Pew poll found that nearly half of registered U.S. voters expect to "have difficulties casting a ballot" this year.

Good Karma Brands welcomes two leaders to manage the station's inception and growth: Cherie Harris, who will be 101.7 The Truth's General Manager, and Kyle Wallace who will serve as Operations Manager.

“I am thrilled to join Good Karma Brands and build a new home for Milwaukee that has been sorely missing. We are going to put together a meeting place - a place for honest and real debate, as well as welcoming conversation, and a place for celebration and connection within the Black community,” said Harris.

Harris is a veteran of Milwaukee radio and television, as an account manager at WKKV-FM (V-100), Radio Disney and WITI-TV (FOX6). She has a Master's in Business and Administration from Cardinal Stritch University and a degree in Communications and Broadcast Journalism from UW-Whitewater.

Kyle Wallace joins 101.7 The Truth as Operations Manager from Marquette University, where he was an admissions counselor. Wallace has been with the Good Karma Brands family in a part-time capacity since 2016. He has an undergraduate degree in Communication from UW-Whitewater and a Master of Arts in Sports Management from Central Michigan University.

“We have already started the search for the voices that will make 101.7 The Truth a destination for the stories and experiences that are relevant to the Black community,” Wallace said. “We have the resources to make sure that our new station really is a local marketplace for ideas and commerce. This isn't a nationally-syndicated project, it's home-grown.”

101.7 The Truth is recruiting now for several positions, including talk hosts, producers, news reporters, as well as sales and marketing coordinators. Career descriptions can be found at: www.goodkarmabrand.com/careers.

How To Prevent Political Discussions From Polarizing Your Workplace

sions in the workplace is critical, says Joel Patterson (www.JoelPatterson.com), a workplace culture expert, founder of The Vested Group and ForbesBooks author of The Big Commitment: Solving The Mysteries Of Your ERP Implementation.

“Unfortunately, things have gotten so divisive that even if somebody just wears a shirt or makes an innocuous comment, somebody is going to get upset,” Patterson says. “When people at work are afraid to say anything political, that fearfulness isn't conducive to a cohesive work environment. Rather than ignore it or futilely try to shutter it, business owners and managers are better off having a plan to deal with the political dynamic so it won't disrupt their business and drive their employees apart.”

Patterson offers tips to help business leaders manage political discussions and tensions, and keep politics in proper perspective, in the workplace:

Make company culture the first priority. Having an established set of company core values is highly beneficial in giving your team a framework for how they interact with peers, clients, and other professional contacts externally, Patterson says. “If you have a solid workplace culture, then core values like respect for others, including respect for others' opinions, will carry the day and overcome political disagreements,” he says. “An emphasis on core values reminds everyone that they are all on the same team.”

Give flexibility – within reason. “Most people don't want or expect a formal workplace policy related to politics in the workplace,” Patterson says. “The leadership team of your business needs to let employees know they are valued as individuals while emphasizing that leaving politics out of the workplace is the best practice for all involved. Let your employees know you are flexible with their comfort level, but they are also accountable for how they conduct themselves as a representative of your company.”

Keep political programs off the office TVs. “You don't want to invite arguments,” Patterson says. “Making sure that office TVs, especially in the break room, are not tuned to political programs is an easy preventive measure. Sometimes the news and panel discussions get people wound up.”

De-escalate, don't instigate. As a manager or business owner, employees will be watching to see how you handle a heated political conversation between workers. “Try to cool things off and lead by exam—

“If you have a solid workplace culture, then core values like respect for others, including respect for others' opinions, will carry the day and overcome political disagreements...An emphasis on core values reminds everyone that they are all on the same team.” —Joel Patterson

ple,” Patterson says. “If the employees persist, tell them that their loud conversation is distracting to a productive work environment. If someone you work with is expressing a viewpoint that doesn't coincide with yours, a mental note to yourself to agree to disagree often does the trick.”

“Handling political talk isn't something business owners and managers should be afraid of,” Patterson says. “It's an opportunity to ease the tension their employees feel and remind them that no matter their differences, they can remain strong together.”
