Two late, great Milwaukee men:
my father, Sanford Carter, and his friend, Henry "Hank" Aaron

A young Henry "Hank" Aaron at the beginning of his legendary baseball career as a member of the Milwaukee Braves.

My father said he felt the young, inexperienced Alabama native might not be aggressive enough in the big leagues. 'Henry is so quiet. I just hope he can stand it as good as Jackie {Robinson} when they get hostile. Some White fans can be vicious. Even though that boy can really hit, the day may come when he'll need some real thick skin.'

By Richard G. Carter

"I've shared a moment with kings..."—Richard Todd, "The Hasty Heart" (1949)

In the Summer of 1999, my beloved father, Sanford Carter — a well-known Milwaukee resident and former Negro Leagues baseball star -- passed away here at 88. And many in Black Milwaukee were overcome with sadness.

In the Spring of 1954, Mr. Carter had befriended an unassuming, 20-year-old Southerner who came to town in low-key fashion, to play for the Milwaukee Braves in the team's second year after moving from Boston.

That young man was Henry (Hank) Aaron, who went away last week in Atlanta at 86 -- recalling for millions his Hall of Fame career as the legitimate home run king of major league baseball. And his death is hard to fathom for Black and White Milwaukeeans who recall his unique baseball skills and quiet dignity during his iconic 1950s years with the Braves at County Stadium.

From a personal standpoint, "Hammerin' Hank's" passing brings back memories of when my late father — who played in the Negro Leagues in the 1930s-40s — took the shy, 20-year-old under his wing when, still known as "Henry" Aaron, he arrived in town.

At the time, my father said Aaron was told to seek him out for advice and, as a result, he assisted Henry in finding a place to live in largely segregated Milwaukee.

He also lent him his own fielder's glove -- a gesture he repeated later for Hank's younger brother, Tommie Aaron, for a Braves' tryout -- much appreciated by Hank.

After they met and talked, my father said he felt the young, inexperienced Alabama native -- a minor league sensation -- might not be aggressive enough in the big leagues.

"Henry is so quiet," he told me. "I just hope he can stand it as good as Jackie {Robinson} when they get hostile. Some White fans can be vicious.

"Even though that boy can really hit, the day may come when he'll need some real thick skin."

A lifelong follower of the game, my father told me that Aaron -- a slugging shortstop who began in "semi-pro" in 1952 with the Mobile (Alabama) Black Bears, then the Indianapolis Clowns of the Negro American League, Eau Claire Bears of the Class C Northern League and Class A Jacksonville (Florida) Braves -- initially swung the bat from a cross-handed stance before being coached to use an orthodox grip.

"That's how green he was," Mr. Carter laughed. "But those days are over and, despite being so slim, he really found his groove as a power-hitter."

One of the best memories for Black Milwaukeeans in those winning, glory days was the Braves' "A-B-C" outfield of Aaron, Billy Bruton and Wes Covington. And how sweet it was. Young, emerging power-hitter Aaron in right, speedster Bruton in center and slugger Covington in left made all of us proud as proud can be.

Among my lasting personal thoughts about Hank's time with the old Braves here was his pioneering radio commercial for Banner Lumber and Mill Work, which he ended by saying: "And that ain't no Baltimore blues."

Back then, as sports editor of the Black weekly Milwaukee Star -- along with photographer Bill Stitt -- I set out to interview a more mature Aaron during his visit to the predominantly Black LaVarnway branch of the Milwaukee Boys Club.

After hearing my name, I clearly remember Hank's first comment. "Did you say Carter?" he asked. "Uh-huh," I replied. "Don't tell me you're Sanford Carter's son?" he again asked. As I nodded in the affirmative, Hank said, "Well I'll be."

He then went on to heap glowing praise upon my father -- recalling the help and personal advice he received after coming to town to play for the still new Milwaukee

Braves in their second year after moving from Boston.
“I was so wet behind the ears, Richard,” he laughed. “I didn’t know nothin,’ and your Dad helped me more than I can say. And I enjoyed hearing about his days in the Negro Leagues, playin’ with guys like Satchel Paige, Josh Gibson and “Cool Papa” Bell.

Mr. Carter’s barnstorming teams -- including the Milwaukee Tigers and Twin City Colored Giants -- played in Racine and Janesville, as well as at wooden Borchert Field in a racially mixed Milwaukee neighborhood at 3000 N. 8th St.

Seating less than 12,000, it was home to the American Association Milwaukee Brewers and filled the block between N. 7th and N. 8th and W. Chambers and W. Burleigh Sts. The park was torn down in 1954 to make way for the I-43 Expressway.

As a wide-eyed youngster, I recall watching Mr. Carter -- a slick-fielding third-baseman in his 30s -- making great plays at what was also called “Borchert Orchard.”

In the outfield, he once made a diving grab of a line drive and the public address announcer said: “Let’s give a big hand to Sandy Carter for that fine catch in right field.” I burst with pride.

Skilled Black semi-pro players included ambitious youngsters and others with jobs who played in their spare time.

Such was my father -- a community activist, realtor and partner in Carter-Moody Insurance, which once shared a building with WNOV-AM radio.

Among Mr. Carter’s personal effects -- which I still have -- were a newspaper story and baseball box score from 1935 in Bismarck, North Dakota, in which he swatted a triple off the legendary, almost unhittable Paige -- something he never tired discussing.

In 1995, my father was inducted into the Hall of Fame of the Old Time Ballplayers Association of Wisconsin -- its third Black member.

Old timers would say, “Sandy Carter would have made the big leagues if he came along a decade later, like Jackie Robinson.”

Also there was Milwaukee’s Black female baseball historian, Aaronetta Anderson, who shared with us a congratulatory telegram to my father from Aaron. Ironically, the gala affair was in a crowded hall on Milwaukee’s mostly White South Side.

After my father, Sanford Carter, left us on August 11, 1999, he was lovingly memorialized by many at St. Marks’ Church in Milwaukee.

Among those in attendance were my two Milwaukee-born daughters -- Sherry Carter, of Black Entertainment Television -- Tracy, and their mother, Odell Carter, of Cleveland.

And now sadly, one-time Milwaukeean, Henry “Hammerin’ Hank” Aaron, has left us down South.

Both he and my father -- local Black baseball greats -- belong to the ages. Milwaukee native Richard G. Carter is a freelance columnist

MILWAUKEE HEALTH DEPARTMENT INVITES RESIDENTS TO JOIN A VIRTUAL TOWN HALL MEETING ON COVID-19 VACCINATIONS

Questions, concerns, and plans regarding the COVID-19 vaccinations will be addressed in a virtual town hall meeting on Wednesday evening.

Medical professionals and public health officials will share authoritative information and provide perspective on issues raised by members of the public.

Panelists include Interim Health Commissioner Marlaina Jackson and Chief Medical Officer Dr. Heather Paradis of the City of Milwaukee Health Department.

Milwaukee Board of Health member Julia Means, a registered nurse at Ascension Health, will join the panel along with Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett. TMJ4's Tony Atkins will moderate the discussion.

"This is a great opportunity to offer reliable information on COVID-19 vaccinations and, more importantly, to listen to the very real concerns that people want to share," Mayor Barrett said.

"Our residents should be empowered with the information they need to make the best decisions – for themselves and for their family members."

The virtual town hall meeting will take place at 6 p.m. on Wednesday, February 10, 2021. To join the meeting, residents can register at bit.ly/CrushCovidTownHall.

Questions for the panel can be submitted in advance at that same site.

The town hall meeting will be aired live with captioning on the City Channel (Spectrum Channel 25 or milwaukee.gov/citychannel), livestreamed on Facebook @MKEhealth, and posted at milwaukee.gov/covidvax after the event.

Girls' nights IN are gonna take COVID-19 OUT.

We don't get enough laughs these days. But, wherever they are, our friends are as close as a click. Vaccines are coming. But until enough of us are vaccinated, we still need to slow the spread. We can watch our distance, and not let COVID-19 keep us apart.

Supervisor Martin Recognizes Black History Month

The County Board of Supervisors held its annual Black History Month celebration at its monthly meeting Thursday morning.

The program included a libation from State Representative Supreme Moore Omokunde, a prayer by Supervisor Russell Antonio Goodwin, Sr. and remarks from Office on African American Affairs Executive Director Jeff Roman and Former Supervisor Elizabeth Coggs.

Supervisor Felesia A. Martin released the following statement in recognition of Black History Month:

“This morning we took a moment at our Milwaukee County Board meeting to acknowledge and honor February as Black History Month,” said Supervisor Martin.

“This was a great opportunity to highlight and honor the resilient and inspirational Black Milwaukeeans who have worked tirelessly to make Milwaukee County a better and more just place to live.

“Our county has not been exempted from racial inequities.

We unfortunately live with some of the worst racial disparities in the nation. It is because of this that it is crucial for us to listen to and highlight our Black community leaders who continue to do the work to help us ensure a fair and equitable Milwaukee County.”

Supervisor Martin represents the 7th Supervisory District on the Board of Supervisors. She serves as Chair of the Economic and Community Development Committee, Vice-Chair of the Health and Human Needs Committee, and also serves on the Parks, Energy & Environment Committee.

Dasha Kelly Hamilton to lead Alverno’s Spark Series

She has written for national magazines, produced three collections of poetry, recorded four spoken word CDs, and published two novels.

Through her non-profit, Still Waters Collective, Hamilton has created literary arts programming for 20 years, and her work has taken her to Botswana, Beirut and the island of Mauritius.

“When we think about changing anything – our jobs, our hair color, last names, routines – we tend to start at ‘when.’

But authentic and lasting change begins with an examination of ‘how and why,’” said Hamilton.

“My life’s work has been realigning individuals and initiatives to purpose and progress.

“I’ve enjoyed translating my three decades of experience and advice as a creative change agent into a hands-on series about managing and effecting change, especially at this time.”

The virtual course consists of six units lasting five weeks each.

Registration is open to women and men, and no college degree is required to enroll. Classes begin February 23, and students may enroll in a specific unit or the entire series.

Discounted tuition is available to members of non-profit organizations. For more information or to register visit alverno.edu/spark.
