BLACK FATHERS Equal Partners in Advancing Maternal and Infant Health

New research to include fathers in improving health of moms and babies

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

A new research project was recently unveiled aimed at better understanding how fathers can be a part of improving the health and well-being of mothers and babies.

The African American Breastfeeding Network, Inc. (AABN) and the UW-Madison's School of Human Ecology and School of Social Work are partnering on the project.

The initiative is funded by a 12-month grant from the UW-Madison Institute for Clinical and Translational Research (ICTR).

The project was announced at a news conference held outside of Big Daddy's BBQ and Soul Food, located on Humboldt Boulevard.

Attendees and officials were invited to lunch and a discussion of the project inside Daddy's following the news conference. Black infant mortality is higher in Wisconsin than any other state in the nation. Maternal mortality is five times higher among Black women than White women in Wisconsin. The state has had persistent inequalities in maternal and infant health.

Research demonstrates that partner support during pregnancy is associated with positive maternal child health outcomes and that

Mayor focuses on reckless driving, workforce readiness in MKE Recovery and Resilience Plan

Barrett's plan Includes Investment in public safety, and other community-focused initiatives

Compiled by MCJ Editorial Staff

Mayor Tom Barrett plans to address reckless driving in Milwaukee with more than $6 million of American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) funding.

The reckless driving initiatives are part of the Mayor's Milwaukee Recovery and Resilience Plan that he is presenting to the Common Council this week.

Other priorities the Mayor unveiled at a recent news conference include violence prevention, early childhood programs, street lighting improvements, and additional business Restart investments, all part of the first phase of ARPA funds to be deployed in Milwaukee.

"In our community discussions and our online survey, residents are asking city government to take action against reckless driving," Barrett said.

"The investments I'm advancing support and complement the work of the Milwaukee Police Department."

"As we curb reckless driving, we are improving safety, increasing neighborhood quality of life, and restoring a sense of civility on our roadways."

A majority of the $6 million will be invested in physical improvements to discourage reckless driving. That includes curb extensions, pedestrian refuge islands, raised crosswalks, pedestrian signals, pavement markings, street trees, and green infrastructure along some 25 miles of Milwaukee streets.

More than $1 million will go to the Milwaukee Police Department for motorcycles, mobile computers, and overtime to increase reckless driving enforcement activities.

STUDENTS LEAP INTO THE REAL WORLD WITH WE ENERGIES

When Nancy Benifield stood 180 feet above the ground on the roof of the We Energies Oak Creek Power Plant, she could see steam rising from part of the plant below and was amazed by the sheer scope and size of the organism that helps deliver energy to her home every day.

"When you first get there, it looks like an army base. It's so big!" exclaims Nancy. She follows with the list of gear she needs to wear every time she is at the site: work boots, gloves, earplugs, helmet, goggles, face mask.

"They told me I was going to get dirty. There's a lot of hard-working people there. And it is s-o-o-o-o big!" she says again. "Sometimes, I cannot remember what floor I am on."

The Central City Cyberschool (C3) freshman says the magnitude of the plant is not the only characteristic that has sharpened her insight into the working world. Nancy is quick to add that her mentor, Principle Engineer Elizabeth Ehrke, is among those pioneer women in a field traditionally dominated by men. Ehrke has eagerly shared her success in the field.

Those are the kinds of impressions that LaQuita Evans, senior power plant supervisor, hopes will stick with students.

C3 and We Energies have partnered through the African American Business Resource Group of Wisconsin to create hands-on, long-term learning experiences for students in a new apprenticeship program.

Evans is a mentor and coordinates the program on the We Energies side of that collaboration.

"I want to show them – someone who looks like them – that all things are possible," says Evans, an African-American female plant supervisor. "Because I never thought that I would be doing some-

JONA MOORE promoted to Vice President of African American Chamber of Commerce of Wisconsin

The African American Chamber of Commerce of Wisconsin (AACCW) has promoted Jona Moore to be its Vice President.

Moore previously served as Program Manager for the organization, which she joined in 2019.

“Jona has demonstrated she has what it takes to meet every challenge we have put before her since joining our organization. She deserves this promotion.

“We’re going to need her leadership, her vision and her energy as we continue to be impactful to both Black Entrepreneurs and the Wisconsin community,” said Ossie Kendrix, President and CEO of the AACCW.

A native of Milwaukee, Moore graduated from Rufus King High School before earning a bachelor of science degree at Jackson State University in Mississippi.

She returned to her hometown and served several roles of rising importance at the Pearls for Teen Girls, a dynamic Milwaukee nonprofit organization, before joining the AACCW.

Moore is playing a key role in managing the AACCW’s new Legacy Co-Working & Innovation Space at 1920 N. Dr. Martin Luther King Drive in the heart of Milwaukee’s Bronzeville Neighborhood.

“It seems right and natural that I would grow up to serve the neighborhood I know so well.

“To be a catalyst in helping the people here start and grow their own businesses and create jobs in the neighborhood is an exciting blessing I really cherish,” Moore said.

Moore recently graduated from the African American Leadership Alliance Milwaukee (AALAM) Leadership Development Program.

“I learned so much from that program. I learned that it’s important to always give your best, no matter what you are doing or what room you are in,” Moore said. “And stage time is leadership time. When you’ve got the stage, it’s go time.”

The African American Chamber of Commerce of Wisconsin champions the growth and sustainability of African American-owned businesses by providing access to capital, education and advocacy through capacity building and strategic partnerships.

“It seems right and natural that I would grow up to serve the neighborhood I know so well. To be a catalyst in helping the people here start and grow their own businesses and create jobs in the neighborhood is an exciting blessing I really cherish...”

EPA Announces $400,000 for Milwaukee and Madison to Fund Environmental Justice Initiatives

CHICAGO — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) today announced that it will provide $200,000 each for Milwaukee and Madison for Environmental Justice (EJ) initiatives through funds allocated to EPA under the American Rescue Plan (ARP). In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, Congress designated this funding for grants, contracts, and other agency activities that identify and address disproportionate environmental or public health harms and risks in underserved communities through a range of local initiatives.

“These initiatives in Milwaukee and Madison will help areas that are overburdened with pollution,” said EPA Re-

Violence prevention activities proposed in the Mayor’s Milwaukee Recovery and Resilience Plan include $3 million to expand the 414LIFE efforts on the City’s south side. A particular focus is increasing the numbers, training, and diversity among early childhood educators and staff.

More than $1.5 million will advance programs overseen by the Milwaukee Office of Early Childhood Initiatives. A particular focus is increasing the numbers, training, and diversity among early childhood educators and staff.

Building on the success of Milwaukee’s business Restart program over the past year, the Mayor is proposing an additional $7.5 million in assistance to local businesses as they navigate change brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic.

Previous Restart investments preserved jobs, protected local businesses, and promoted neighborhood commercial activity.

With a $10 million investment, the Mayor is addressing street lighting concerns in neighborhoods from the far northwest side to the south side. The plan includes replacing and upgrading outdated circuitry in areas that have seen the most frequent street lighting outages in order to improve safety and prepare for future LED lighting installations.

Last August, the Mayor established a policy requiring City departments to integrate explicit consideration of racial equity in all decision making. Every program funded in the Mayor’s plan has been viewed from a racial equity lens.

This first phase of the Mayor’s Recovery and Resilience Plan, including previously announced investments in housing, jobs, and workforce development, will be reviewed by the Milwaukee Common Council over the next several weeks.

“We have an opportunity to use federal ARPA funds in ways that support lasting change in Milwaukee. This is a once-in-a generation chance to address challenges this City faces, and I am eager to move forward,” Mayor Barrett said.

thing like this. And here I am, a success story.”

The 2020-21 academic year served as a pilot for the apprenticeship program with two students.

Four more are planned to begin their apprenticeship next year, with expectations to engage new students every year that may stay in the program through high school graduation. They begin with simple job shadowing and exposure to workplace culture and expectations.

Eventually, the school and company hope to increase the benefits and impact of the program in the students’ junior and senior years that could possibly lead to permanent jobs for those who wish to apply.

“We hope the skills these young people pick up will prepare them for job opportunities at We Energies,” Evans explains.

“This is an investment for us as well. We’re learning that we have a new population of students with new ideas and new technology that we are learning about as well.”

Ehrke adds that the collaboration is as much a recruiting tool for the company as it is a bridge to possible work for students. Ehrke mentors Nancy and her classmate Nyja Taylor on site.

“We talk about the vast number of opportunities at We Energies. We have mechanics, electricians, operators and engineers, but we also have doctors, realtors, environmental specialists and other jobs that students may not expect,” Ehrke lists. “There is lots of upward mobility.”

She adds: “We thought really hard about what we could get them involved with so that it will have added value for both them and the company.

“We want them doing things that are going to contribute to their development.”

Ehrke and Evans both work in the power generation part of the business, but as they envision the apprenticeship program expanding, and they can see students working in other departments.

So far, Nancy and Nyja have gotten initial exposure to the company and much practical advice about what it is to work in the world.

“Most definitely, my mentor has taught me about how important it is to communicate. In the plant, they have to talk with each other to stay safe,” Nyja says of the workers she has visited.

Learning how to interview, talking about workplace problems of today and the importance of professional demeanor have been among the most valuable lessons so far, says Nyja.

Evans says that frankly talking about issues and expectations in the workplace, helps provide those transferable skills students will need on any job. “We’re preparing them for what’s to come – the real world.”

Ehrke, too, says she feels that imparting advice that others may not think to share is critical for young women who may seek to go into a field that is focused on science, technology, engineering or math.

“As a female in STEM, I always felt I had to prove myself, that I must have extraordinary skills in math and science,” Ehrke admits. “But now I tell everyone I mentor, especially young girls, that STEM and engineering are open to anyone willing to work hard. Most of my work is really practical, and most of it I learned on the job.

“You are not going to know everything when you walk into the job. They will teach you,” she adds. “Young girls, on average, are not socialized like boys. Typically, they are socialized not to take those risks. So I want to make those risks safer.”

Evans is quick to jump in. The future stands ready for young men as well, adding she wants all of the students to be successful.

“I want them to know that this is not easy. But I also want them to know that there are good jobs here waiting,” she notes. “College is not for everyone.

“Lots of these jobs do not require a college degree and are wonderful.”

Having experiences like this apprenticeship make career options more visible and realistic for students.

Evans offers her own story: “I started at We Energies as a seasonal consultant almost 16 years ago. I was unemployed at the time and needed a job, so going into customer service was my foot in the door. I did that for about two-and-a-half years, and then I jumped into power generation. So, I have been with the power plant for quite some time. It was the best move I ever could have made.

“I didn’t know anyone who worked for the organization, and I didn’t even know that this part of the industry ever existed. It took that leap.”

It’s a leap into success she says she hopes to coach others to make as well.

This shared commitment to introducing students to employment opportunities is just one of the program benefits that excites school leaders.

“Through apprenticeships at We Energies, our students have the opportunity to learn and work side-by-side with women and people of color who have walked in their shoes and found success,” said Patience Wade, director of Central City Cyberschool’s high school and a Latina woman. “We believe our partnership with We Energies is a critical strategy for empowering our graduates to achieve family-sustaining employment, while increasing the diversity of Milwaukee’s talent pipeline.”

We Energies named the nation’s most trusted energy company by business customers

We Energies is being recognized as the nation’s top energy company by the businesses it serves. We Energies received the highest score on the 2021 Trusted Business Partner Brand Trust Index in a nationwide study by Escalent, a top human behavior and analytics advisory firm.

We Energies received the honor, in part, because of its efforts to connect with and assist local businesses and communities throughout the COVID-19 pandemic. In addition to providing affordable, reliable and clean energy during the pandemic, We Energies worked with customers on flexible payment arrangements and enhanced digital services. The We Energies Foundation also supported communities through donations to front-line relief efforts and a rebuild and revitalize fund aimed at helping businesses in historically underinvested communities.

“In a year of extraordinary challenges, our focus on providing reliable, world-class service never wavered,” said Tom Metcalfe, president — We Energies. “We are grateful to serve our customers every day.”

The Trusted Business Partner recognition from Escalent is based on surveys of more than 15,000 business electric and natural gas utility customers.

The report evaluates energy companies in the areas of customer focus, business community support, communications effectiveness, reliable quality, environmental dedication and company reputation.

RELIGIOUS COMMENTARY: BIG MAMA SAID, 'IF THE LORD SAYS THE SAME, THEN I WILL TOO'

Like Big Mama's 'more than a notion,' I know so many other mothers, grandmothers, sisters, aunts and Black women who have uttered that statement, "If the Lord says the same I will too." The phrase is a staple thought in our community.

EPA Announces $400,000 for Milwaukee, Madison to Fund Environmental Justice Initiatives

Region 5 Acting Administrator Cheryl Newton. "Advancing environmental justice is part of EPA's core mission of protecting human health and the environment in all communities."

"This federal funding from EPA will help support great work being done in Madison and Milwaukee on solutions to local COVID-19 public health issues," said U.S. Senator Tammy Baldwin. "I know President Biden and EPA Administrator Regan are committed to helping our state address racial disparities in health outcomes and this investment in Wisconsin shows that they support us and the work we are doing at the local level."

EPA announced $200,000 in funding to the City of Milwaukee for outreach and education about indoor air quality through a Healthy People, Homes and Neighborhood campaign.

The campaign to predominately African American and Latinx neighborhoods will help to distribute information about COVID-19, safe disinfectants, low-cost methods for controlling home energy use and ways to prevent exposure to lead, mold and other contaminants.

The project will increase underserved residents' awareness of how to maintain a healthy home environment and how to access more resources to protect against COVID-19.

"Milwaukee is committed to be a healthier, safer, and more sustainable community. By directly addressing racial disparities, we can improve the lives of Milwaukee residents who are most vulnerable," Milwaukee Mayor Tom Barrett said. "This environmental justice grant is a welcome addition to our efforts."

"Communities of color in Milwaukee have experienced health, education, and economic disparities that were only magnified during the pandemic. Now, we must make conscious efforts to fight these inequities and secure equity for our residents," said U.S. Rep. Gwen Moore. "With this environmental justice grant for the City of Milwaukee's Healthy People, Homes and Neighborhoods program, we can empower residents with the tools and knowledge to keep their communities healthy and safe and protect their homes from environmental hazards."

EPA is also providing $200,000 in funding to the City of Madison for public education, training, and an emergency planning program related to the impacts of COVID-19 on low-income individuals, non-English speaking populations, and racial and ethnic minority populations in two neighborhood clusters located on the Southwest and Northeast side of Madison.

The key objective of this program, Intervene Against COVID-19, is to reduce transmission of COVID-19 by increasing community knowl-

Maybe it came off as just a catchphrase to you or maybe you thought it was an easy response for a churchgoer to say instead of "Hello" or "Good-bye."

I decided that since Lucille "Big Mama" Allen said it, then I would unravel my understanding of it. The statement definability has religious connotations not like some of the phrase, including "If Fate decrees," and "Anyway the wind blows it is ok with me," or "What a blessing, it must be my lucky day," all of which relate to the future but does not have the religious connotation that "IF THE LORD SAYS THE SAME..." has.

The idea is, "If the Lord permits." The spiritual Christian submits himself to the will of God. He keeps God's viewpoint on his whole life. We say, "The Lord willing; I will do this or that." This attitude demonstrates submission to God's will. It should be more than a jingle but an orientation of life that accepts God's providence for my life. "I accept what God chooses to do with me."

This is far from a magic formula for one's life. Big Mama told us many times that our way is not our way yet, it is God's way. What I understood from Big Mama's statement fell along the lines of God and Fate. I evaluated what she meant: "...barring some unforeseen act or occurrence that God does NOT bless me through, then things will work out and I will be here."

I do recall when on a family visit to one of my Big Mama's 21 siblings, like Aunt Rosa, Aunt Lillian or Aunt Mary, as they ended the visit they would say, "'Cille,' you coming back right?" She would always respond with, "If the Lord says the same I will!"

My French quarter family customized the phrase when we visited with them. They would answer with, "If God is willing and the creek don't rise!" Amen!

What I do know is "If the Lord says the same I will" was tied to 2 important factors. It was tied to 1) the future and 2) God's will.

Lucille "Big Mama" Allen knew one thing. If we lived under God's will, we had a better chance for the best future

PERSPECTIVES

QUOTE OF THE WEEK

“To be African American is to be African without any memory, and American without any privilege.” —James Baldwin

CRITICAL RACE THEORY: WHAT IT IS, WHY REPUGNANT REPUBLICANS ARE SCARED OF IT, AND WHY DEMOCRATS PROBABLY SHOULD BE TOO!

Suppose the Conservative Right's dishonest campaign to sanitize America's racist history by outlawing Critical Race Theory (CRT) expands to the media.

In that case, I assume this column will come under intense scrutiny--and ultimately banished to virtual limbo.

Though no two Rightwing critics of CRT can agree on a specific definition of what it is, they nonetheless want it banned from public (government) educational institutions.

The Republican Roaches are generally in concert that CRT is a curriculum that advocates America is a racist country and that a system of apartheid continues to exist--fueled by White supremacy, capitalistic greed, and systemic racism.

And they obviously fear recent challenges to 'His-story' will open a floodgate of questions that could lead to a new historical reality and calls for systemic changes.

The CRT threatens to prove that the plight of the poor and African Americans today is rooted in a paradigm created centuries ago, one that is interwoven in the fabric of America and impacts every aspect of American life.

Thus, the Resistant Right wants to maintain the current paradigm of misinformation and lies taught to our children in government schools and to continue its primary function as a pipeline to prison or poverty.

The best way to take the African American contingency out of the equation is to indoctrinate them early with misinformation and inferior education to limit their success and competitive spirit.

In essence, the Rabid Republicans seek to sanitize history and deflect questions about the cancer of racism that has hampered Black progress for centuries.

For those who don't know, Critical Race Theory is essentially an examination of history from the perspective of Black America.

It posits that racism in America results from a complex institutional paradigm—apartheid—versus the prejudices of a few.

One internet defines CRT as an “intellectual movement, a loosely organized framework of legal analysis based on the premise that race is not a natural, biologically grounded feature of physically distinct subgroups of human beings, but a socially constructed (culturally invented) category that is used to oppress and exploit people of color.”

Critical race theorists hold that institutions in the United States are inherently racist insofar as they function to create and maintain social, economic, and political inequalities between Whites and Blacks.

The CRT paradigm originated from writings by Black legal scholars in the 1970s who initially studied the judicial system to ascertain how inherent bias and institutional racism impacted excessive sentencing of African Americans.

That research has expanded to include a study of how the cancer of racism has spread throughout the entire American body structure, influencing every aspect of our lives and sustaining a paradigm that has widened the gap between the rich and poor, Black and White, intelligent and dumb.

Still, confused as to why the Redundant Right is fighting to keep CRT away from the public?

My favorite historian and storyteller, Teju, explains:

“The right wants to expunge CRT so "White people can control the flow of the dialogue (the narrative) and avoid taking responsibility for White Supremacy.”

"We don't need a new name for the same old thing,” Teju continued.

“And for the record, White racism, White skin privilege, and White supremacy are not theories. It is the essence of 'The American Way,' designed for--and causing the destruction of--Black people (the only group I have the right to speak for).

“Racism is not a theory. It's a fact. A theory is an idea that has not yet been proven.”

Teju, as always, hit the nail on the proverbial head. Or should I say hood? An equally provocative and succinct academic evaluation of the current debate was provided by a friend of the MCJ editor, who shall remain anonymous, but allowed his analysis to be published.

He provided a history of the CRT paradigm that shows a link between the past and the present:

"The vast majority of those decrying Critical Race Theory has not the slightest scintilla of a clue what CRT actually is. More importantly, their efforts are decidedly more malignant than merely the manifestation of demonstrated nescience.

"Like the ‘Lost Cause’ efforts of confederate sympathizers, those attacking CRT attempt to deny the truths of American history and rewrite that history whenever and wherever they can.

"As I saw in an editorial cartoon, those attacking CRT are attempting to put a giant smiley-face sticker on Emmett Till's coffin."

There are different theories as to why the GOP and the Rancid Right have only recently engineered attacks on the remote possibility of CRT being introduced in government schools.

Some believe the anti-CRT campaign was orchestrated to deflect attention away from Republican political losses of the last year and the mortification of the January 6 revolt.

Then again, there is the belief that CRT will take the covers off the great American historical lie and could spark a violent rebuttal.

Most feel the GOP's idiotic assertion that advocates of CRT are Marxists or anarchists is merely a ploy to rally the Trump Troops around a racist theme and to undermine efforts for victims of slavery to gain reparations.

Whatever the reason, the Raggedly Right is going all out in making the CRT the dominant issue of 2021.

Not only is the GOP pushing an idiotic message that CRT will spark a rebellion and an American Mau Mau attack against unassuming White suburbanites, but they also posit that it may open the eyes of brainwashed White youth.

In other words, the truth won't set you free.

Instead, it will incite a cultural revolution and a new civil war.

It will turn citizens—Black and White--against the God-state, Uncle Sam, and the red, white and blue.

Political correctness has already run amuck, the far-out Right Roaches believe, and the CRT may very well tip the scales even further.

That's not only asinine in its face and ignores the fact that Black America is already angry, frustrated, and near explosion. Hell, we've been mad for 40 years.

It also ignores the reality that while the public/government school system continues to teach irrelevant and dishonest history to our children—as they did us---the truth is available outside the school classroom.

What our parents are not teaching their children about true American history, particularly institutional racism and apartheid, they gain from media, the internet, or peers.

Those millions of Black warriors who paraded and protested last year following the public execution of George Floyd are not as ignorant or naive as the Redundantly Religious Right think they are.

Nor are the White Millennials, who joined them.

In fact, they have rejected much of what they have been taught or told. Many have even abandoned their churches, walked away from their politics, and crossed the street to a different reality.

But the campaign against CRT isn't aimed at them.

The Ridiculous Right is trying to convince a gullible population--the Trump Troops, and the New Confederates--that any comprehensive study of racism's impact on society is disingenuous, un-American, and will force the good people so far to the left that they will fall over the edge of this flat earth.

The question is, will they be successful? Can their crusade convince enough naive Americans to join their cause?

outcomes. She knew a spiritual presence ensured a Godly viewpoint on life by dependence on God's will and our ability to implement divine decision-making.

Lucille “Big Mama” Allen knew that God governs what we accomplish. Not only are our lives in His hands, our success is in His hands.

Some people use the shortness of life as their reason not to act under God's will. Big Mistake! We are still in a state of turmoil as some pundits unravel years of social justice, destroy gains in voting opportunity and create revisionist history.

I say to you, let us honor the truth of God in the way we think about our truth and the way we talk about the fullness of God.

In closing, my question is, “Do you think you can choose to create a positive interaction for 30 days. My answer is “If the Lord says the same I will”

I don't believe they have the power or influence to achieve success by their lonesome.

I believe the Democrats are hiding their heads in the sand as this debate least hide their heads in the asphalt as the GOP does its thang.

And I fear that might happen.

Why you ask?

Well, even if you haven't asked, I'll tell you anyway.

I believe the Democrats are hiding their heads in the sand as this debate wages on because they are complicit in this enterprise.

History will show there is as much dirt on the knees of Democrats as county road clay on the feet of Republicans.

In fact, it was during my lifetime that the Republicans and Democrats supposedly switched political sides, thus substantiating my assertion that they are actually different wings on the same bird.

CRT will reveal Democrats were the Party behind the Confederacy.

Democrats blocked or weakened Civil Rights legislation for the first half of the 20th century.

It was the Democrats who stripped Black citizens of their civil rights through legislation. They then created a system of apartheid to keep the darkies in their place.

Democratic justices on the U.S. Supreme Court all but invalidated the 14th and 15th amendments and instituted paradigms that created a segregated society championed by Uncle Jim Crow.

Granted, the Party miraculously found god (with a small g) in the 1960s and rebranded themselves as the Party of the disenfranchised and the ‘Negroes,’ as we were called then.

They have since advanced policies that destroyed the Black family, imprisoned hundreds of thousands of Black men, and created a poverty industry that has locked many people of color in cold and damp cellars of despair and disinvestment.

They then created a poverty industry to benefit their friends and families, establishing the poor as victims and clients.

It is not a coincidence that the Democrat Party thrives off creating programs to make people comfortable in their misery instead of empowering them to become independent and self-sufficient.

Nor should it be a surprise our ‘overseers’ have blocked the schoolhouse doors to the poor, joining with the teachers union to keep Black and poor children chained to inferior, failing government schools that serve the dual role as a pipeline to prison or poverty while teaching students only enough to sign their names on the welfare check.

Hey, public education is about adults and the money, honey. Not what's best for children.

Thus the party that supposedly represents the poor and ‘Coloreds’ who see education as a passport have for the last 50 years done all in their power to keep them on the ‘plantation’ (aka, the ‘ghetto’).

Meanwhile, ask how many Democrats send their children to government schools. In fact, how many teachers do?

And if you don't believe my theory, you need to go back a few months to see through the conspiracy veil and focus on the Democratic Party's role in the non-partisan race for state superintendent of Public Schools.

The Dems spent over $750,000 to ensure a union-backed a robotic candidate who pledged to maintain the failing status quo over a candidate (Deb Kerr) with a successful record in educating urban children, and previously the Brown Deer school superintendent who headed a the only district in the state without a racial academic achievement gap.

The end result is that the failing status quo will remain in effect, and we will lose another generation of Black children.

Indeed, under CRT, students will examine the racial implications of that scenario and expose how teacher union actions over the century have adversely impacted the Black community.

Given their historical complicity, I believe the Democrats have much to worry about when it comes to CRT. Its introduction would expose to the world—and their Black constituents---their involvement in the interwoven system of racism that keeps people of color on a plantation governed by rules established in the constitution, which posited that we were ‘subhuman.’

As you ponder my proposition about the Democrats, consider it was only a month ago that President Joe Biden, a former moderate with a questionable record on racial issues, announced contrary to common sense that American is NOT a racist country.

And even as Democrats lambasted Republican Senator Tim Scott for saying the same thing, Vice President Kamala Harris, the 'sister' who took Biden to task for his opposition to school 'desegregation,' echoed Scott.

I wouldn't put money on what Barack Obama would say to that question if it was asked of him outside of the political sphere, but I bet a dollar against a dime he would have said America isn't racist if he were still president.

Also, note that the Democrat's only successful venture to 'end racism' has been their actions to tear down Confederate monuments in Washington.

And they have been joined by so-called liberals in making an issue of similar displays throughout the south.

This raises the question of whether they too are in effect 'sanitizing history.'

Does taking down a Confederate statue mean that part of history didn't exist? Does removing a confederate flag in the south mean racism doesn't exist anymore?

I'm among the few who say keep the racist monuments where they are. Dust off the pictures of Jefferson Davis and shoo away the pigeons on the Robert E. Lee statues.

Keep them erect, so I can take my grandchildren to see them and explain what happened and why we are in the predicament we're in today.

I want to explain the unwavering appreciation and love for the confederate flag and talk about the bigots who remain appreciative of traitors and White supremacists.

If nothing else, I want to use the monuments of traitors to arm my children against the possibility of a new civil war. And don't say it won't happen. It happened on January 6. And those folks are still around.

Thus, I give Democrats no pat on the back for their myopic actions. From my vantage point, they are part of the problem and want to erase from history the fact that the Confederates were Democrats.

Without understanding the ramifications, opponents of CRT have introduced a controversy that will lead to a reexamination of His-story and an unweaving of the bleached fabric that holds this country together.

By attacking CRT, the Racist Republican Roaches have sparked a discussion and debate they are bound to regret. —Hotep
