There is an often quoted saying by the 19th century German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche: "That which does not kill us makes us stronger."

For sure, the six 2021 Terence N. Thomas scholarship recipients have been made stronger by the events of the COVID-19 pandemic, not to mention the killings of George Floyd, Breonna Taylor, and other African Americans and people of color at the hands of law enforcement and civilians, who made last year a year of reckoning on White supremacy and racism.

Their new-found strength has gotten them through a lot of uncertainty as it relates to not only their health, but their academics.

Despite the shut-down of many colleges and universities during the pandemic, these students—through zoom classes or limited face-to-face learning—found a way to persevere and succeed.

Elise Ashley, Tyler Baldwin, Cameron LeFlore, Jarrell Lovett, Aya Mahmoud, and Autumn Mays are now poised to take their respective educations to the next level and continue their academic journey to completion.

During the uncertain school year in this historically unprecedented time, the Terence N. Thomas (TNT) Scholarship program has had their backs, supporting them not only monetarily, but with council and prayers for continued success.

Approximately $14,000 will be awarded to this year's group of scholars.

Since 1992, TNT Scholarship program—named after Dr. Terence Thomas, the late oldest son of MCJ Publisher Patricia O'Flynn Pattillo, who died suddenly almost 30 years ago—has given away over $1 million in stipends to low-income students and students of color in Milwaukee.

The TNT fund enjoys a 98% graduation rate and a 85% post-graduate graduation rate. Most of the students have come from Milwaukee Public Schools.

The scholars say their over-riding success has been attributed to good study habits; teachers and counselors who continuously encouraged and inspired them, community thought leaders who have guided them with sage advice and introductions to internships and summer jobs.

They also credit family, neighbors, and their own peer group within the fund for setting the bar high and be part of the same alumni group each year.

Peer accomplishments, trips and over-sea adventures have also been the impetus for them to keep fighting to maintain high grades so they can compare notes and grow together.

Pattillo organized the scholarship to preserve the memory of her son and to help Milwaukee's young people have the

State Senator Larson drops out of U.S. Senate race, endorses Mandela Barnes

State Sen. Chris Larson has suspended his U.S. Senate campaign and is endorsing Lt. Governor Mandela Barnes as the best candidate to defeat Sen. Ron Johnson, fight for healthcare, jobs, and a 'wealth tax' so millionaires pay their fair share.

"I know Mandela will never stop fighting to create opportunity for every Wisconsinite. I encourage my supporters to support Mandela, I will do everything I can to ensure he is our nominee, and I will work hard to ensure the Democratic Senate nominee and other Democrats on the ballot are successful in November of 2022. We must do all we can to unrig the system so it works for everyone, not just the ultra-wealthy and Wall Street."

Thanking Larson for his support, Barnes said he looked forward to working with the state senator and other state leaders in continuing the fight for opportunity for every Wisconsin family, ‘Generalizations’ and ‘Absolutes’...

There's a shortage of 'good' Black men. Most of them are either in prison, gay, or bow-wows.

Absolutes...

Black people operate on CP time; are always late and unprepared. (The revolution started at precisely 8 a.m. on June 19, 1976, but ended abruptly because everybody was late.)

Generalizations...

Black women raise their daughters, but 'love' their sons, who are more than likely to become dropouts, criminals, and sperm donors.

Generalizations...Black people don't care about other Black people. We shun unity, are more divided than any other ethnic group and subscribe to the 'crabs in the barrel' paradigm.

Absolutes... All Black women are sexually promiscuous, breed like rabbits, and lack moral foundations.

Challenge of COVID, and national racial reckoning can't keep TNT scholars from shining educational opportunities Thomas valued.

"He was raised to pay it forward," Pattillo said of her son's willingness to give back to the community that raised him. "And through the scholarship, he is paying it forward to these young people who will then pay it forward after they get their education."

A Milwaukee native, Thomas was a high achiever from the beginning, according to Pattillo, who said her son had an interest in medicine since his early days. He eventually made it to study the field at Michigan State's medical school.

After graduating, Thomas began residency at a Flint, Michigan hospital. He planned to come back to Milwaukee after completing the residency.

It was during that first residency year, that Thomas' grandmother died. "He had such deep regret that his grandma had not seen any more of what he would do," Pattillo recalled. "He made sure what he had been given was returned to this community."

But days after returning home from his grandmother's funeral, Thomas suffered a fatal asthmatic attack. He was only 29.

As Thomas' family worked through the double tragedy of losing Thomas and his grandmother, Pattillo was thinking about how her son lived his life.

"As we began to think about how best to remember him, we thought of how important education was to him and how determined he was to give back," she said.

The scholarship offers a $2,000 annual stipend for college students. "We want our students to be able to focus completely on their education," said Pattillo. We tell our students 'your job is to get an education, we'll figure out the money.'"

One notable alumnus of the TNT Scholarship is Common Council President Cavalier Johnson. Johnson was the first in his family to attend college. He pointed to the fact the scholarship helped him not only get through school with minimal debt, it allowed him to be a role model for his family and neighbors.

"The opportunity to go to college on a full-ride opened doors not just for me, but for the rest of my family and neighborhood," Johnson said. "Here we are decades later, and I still come back every year to talk about the impact this scholarship had on my life."

Pattillo hopes to return to holding on-site, face-to-face celebrations of academic brilliance in 2022.

In the meantime, there will be a Virtual Awards Ceremony Sunday, August 8. Visit the TNT website—drtntscholarship.org—for more information about the graduates of May 2021, and to see how donations by the community continues to seed success each year.

This year, the Terence N. Thomas Scholarship Fund thanks the Brewers Community Foundation, Alive, the Fellowship Open, donations from the TNT Board of Directors, the Milwaukee Community Journal, Inc.; and purchasers of the book, "Milwaukee's Black Legacy Families—2020."

We encourage all readers to donate at the fund's website: drtntscholarship.org.

Generalizations (oversimplifications)... Black businesses are inept, disrespectful toward their customers, and lack creditability. All of them overcharge, sell faulty materials, and can't be trusted.

Absolute... Black men prefer lying around playing video games instead of working.

Generalizations (sweeping statements)... Black people are too naïve to participate in the political process and must be prodded and coerced. They don't hold politicians accountable, are more in tune with symbolism than substance.

And oh yeah, we must be provided special accommodations because it's harder for us to get IDs than White people.

Generalization... All Black people have rhythm. But that God-gift doesn't help us walk straight lines to the polls, a crooked route to pick up litter around our homes, or an indirect path to motivate our children to maximize their educational experience.

Absolute generalizations....We don't value education. We are genetically inferior and need affirmative action to advance.

Wanna hide something from Black people? Put it in a book.

Generalizations, generalizations, generalizations. Absolutes, absolutes, absolutes.

They define us, and most have become accepted stereotypes while generally untrue—if not blatantly deleterious.

My favorite generalizations start with 'we don't' and 'if we (unite)'. My favorite absolute begins with 'you, we, they never....'

While some Black people are quick to disparage Whites for uttering assorted G&As (generalizations and absolutes), few of us (another conception) acknowledge we contribute mightily to entrenched stereotypes and preconceptions as well. Nor do we recognize how those G&As impact our socioeconomic and cultural status.

Seems like every day, I hear a new generalization, frequently sandwiched between absolutism and stereotype.

(I took a break from typing this column to make a run to the bank, during which I tuned into my fourth favorite local radio show—Tory Lowe on the Truth 101.7 FM. I heard six generalizations in the 30 minutes of travel time, one absolute, three unreferenced 'facts,' and two unsubstantiated declarations.)

Excluding local and national radio talk shows featuring various radio revolutionaries, I average two generalizations each day. In 47% of the time, at least one of those generalizations is sandwiched between an absolute or unfounded stereotype.

In far too many tribal households, every third sentence uttered by the rib bone starts with: 'you never,' or: 'why can't you ever....'

Most brothers just ignore them, understanding sisters have been socialized by the media and BFFs to accept that absolute reality.

That's particularly true when the woman is a product of the 'mother-mate' syndrome.

Warning, another generalization.

regardless of Zip code.

"As I've done throughout my career, I'll fight to bring common sense solutions to the United States Senate like a Medicare for all plan that helps us realize the dream of health care for every American, a green new deal that benefits the people of Wisconsin and creates good jobs right here at home, and ensuring rich corporations and ultra-millionaires finally pay their fair share in taxes, so we can provide tax relief to Wisconsin families who have borne the brunt of the tax burden from Washington for far too long."

SIGNIFYIN': 'GENERALIZATIONS AND 'ABSOLUTES'

A 'mother-mate' is that sister who raised her children essentially by herself. She was the head of the household and generally isn't accepting of a biblical nuclear family role.

That's not an absolute, but it comes close.

Absolutes are just as wrong as generalizations. They leave little room for logical discussion; they generalize without rationalization or data to back them up.

From a man's point of view, upon hearing the other four-letter word-- 'never'--there's no sense in offering a different perspective or reality. It's best to focus on that one anatomical organ that Nyame gave exclusively to men for that purpose. (Adam's apple, in case you have a dirty mind.)

The alternative is an unnecessary fight, which will include another absolute---our supposed insensitivity to a woman's needs.

Since Black politicians are 'never' available, accountable, or accommodating, why vote, attend a meeting supporting a piece of legislation, or contribute to their campaigns?

If you think it through, you'll recognize the dangers of generalizations, and you can understand why they---along with absolutes---contribute to our socio-economic-cultural stagnation. And our self-hatred.

You may even discover the link between our obsession with generalizations and how we're treated by the power structure, particularly the political establishments.

A strong case can be made both parties utilize built-in excuses. They can justify their actions by announcing our generalizations.

Many of us are concerned about the heightened political polarization these days, not only because this paradigm is disingenuous, but because it shuts the door on beneficial legislation requiring cooperation.

A case in point was former State Representative Jason Fields' working with Republicans to advance legislation of benefit to our tribe.

His reward was to be attacked and ostracized. Democratic Party leadership actually conspired to throw him out of office.

And many Black folks---pawns in the partisan political chess game---fell for the Okey-Doke.

That was a few years back, and the polarization was nowhere near as bad as today.

The Trump Administration's flirtation with racists and White Supremacists created an atmosphere so toxic that to be seen walking on the same side of the street with a Republican can get you thrown out of the party, or, as President Biden declared, to lose your Black card.

Because of our generalizations about Republicans (they are all racists, right?) and our unwillingness to accept the reality that only we can or will empower us, the Grand Wizard of the KKK can run as a Democrat in an all-Black district and expect to win against a Black Republican.

AUGUST IS NAT'L BLACK BUSINESS MONTH

Did you know August is National Black Business Month? The origination of National Black Business Month is attributed to businessman, John William Templeton, and engineer Frederick E. Jordan, Sr., in August 2004. According to Black Enterprise, Jordan felt compelled to highlight and uplift Black business owners like himself after reflecting on the challenges he faced as a new business owner. Templeton and Jordan teamed up to have August recognized as National Black Business Month.¹

According to the United States Census Bureau in a Report released January 28, 2021, the 2019 Annual Business Survey covering reference year 2018, approximately 18.3% (1.0 million) of all U.S. businesses were minority owned and about 19.9% (1.1 million) of all businesses were owned by women). Additional statistics released indicate Black or African Americans owned approximately 124,551 businesses with about 28.5% of these businesses in the Health Care and Social Assistance sector, the highest percentage of any minority group.²

You are encouraged to support Black-Owned Businesses not just during the month of August but throughout the year.

Supporting Black-Owned Businesses MATTERS as it does several things: (1) it closes the racial wealth gap; (2) strengthens local economies; (3) fosters job creation; (4) celebrates Black culture and serves the community; (5) holds other companies accountable; and (6) visibility and representation in the Green Economy.³

In an article published in Forbes, it noted supporting Black-Owned Businesses should be more than just a trend.

During the height of the Black Lives Matter protests, the Google search for Black-Owned Businesses reached a value of 100 (the peak popularity for a term) during the May 31 to June 6, 2020 period.

Since then, according to the Forbes article, the interest over time for the search term has largely been on a downward trend, with a few spikes in June and July of 2020.

Support of Black-Owned Businesses should be more than a "trend" but a movement where people are supporting Black businesses regularly. The author of the Forbes article offered these suggestions to support Black-Owned Businesses throughout the year:

1. Add them to your list of go-to places.
2. Tell people about them.
3. Follow and post about them on social media.
4. Write positive and constructive reviews.

Culturally, generalizations and absolutes have created a level of dysfunction and pandemonium that has all but destroyed our value system, along with the Black nuclear family.

We are so confused we call each other disparaging epithets, fail to accept God/Nyame designed roles, and terrorize our community.

For the record, generalizations are not the privy of the ignorant, lower-class, or culturally naïve. We have all been conditioned to utilize them without thinking.

I've heard ministers preaching them. Merchants utter them frequently.

Many government educators don't teach our children because they believe 'poor' Black children can't be taught. I know some Black parents who feel the same way.

I once wrote about a Black college professor who declared he opposed school choice because Black parents were too stupid to make informed decisions for their children.

The recently elected superintendent of the Department of Public Instruction said the same thing. And yet, our Democratic Party 'leaders' not only earmarked nearly $1 million for her campaign but openly encouraged naïve Black folks to vote for her.

Maybe the worst and most debilitating generalization is that poor

African Americans are happy being victims; are unwilling to do what is necessary to improve their conditions.

We don't stand up to oppression, are not unified, don't read, nor practice religious values, and are morally bankrupt. Oh yeah, and let's not ignore the recently accepted fact that women can replace men; in essence, that single-parent households are apparently divinely preferable.

Actually, I agree with the generalizations—fact—that you will never get 'all Black people to do anything, aside from breathing and dying.

Since we were brought to this country in 1526 (not 1619, as you've been told), most movements have been orchestrated by small groups, never the whole.

Nat Turner only led a handful of revolutionaries. Marcus Garvey rallied a percentage of frustrated African Americans to help purchase the Black Star Lines.

Martin Luther King, Jr. led small—comparatively—armies in his civil rights campaigns.

The Open Housing Marches, which served as my initiation to the human rights war, drew only a few thousand Black Milwaukeeans, as did the Coalition to Save North or the Justice for Earnest Lacy demonstrations.

The crusade to empower poor Black and Brown parents through the Milwaukee Parental Choice Program started with a dozen people. It grew significantly, but it was never even a majority who pulled the cover off educational apartheid and essentially created a national revolution.

While that is true, it should not be taken that only a handful of Black people are opposed to injustice or doing nothing to change their circumstances.

If anything, we must accentuate the positives and make a note of the consensus.

For the record, there are not more Black men in prison than in college.

As a group, we are not poor, spending over $4 billion on goods and services in Milwaukee annually.

Every day, thousands of Black groups—whether sharing a 40 on the corner, playing bid-wist, or emerging from the church, engaged in conversations about the Black plight and how we can improve the quality of life of ALL Black people.

While data from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee provides that most Black men 18-55 are unemployed, nine of ten would like to and are aggressively seeking employment.

Only a small percentage of us 'live' off welfare, or perceive it as an occupation.

We detest crime, aren't on dope, don't steal, know our neighbors, and find a way to support our families.

Granted, most of us don't know all the words to the Black National Anthem, but that's not a generalization. It's a fact.

And I can absolutely declare that we will never enter the promised land until we replace the missionary from being behind the steering wheel. —Hotep.
