'RESPECT,'

THE BIO FILM ON ARETHA FRANKLIN

STARRING JENNIFER HUDSON

A DETAILED AND VERY ENTERTAINING MOVIE!

Oscar winner Jennifer Hudson belts one out in "Respect!"

Review By Dwight Brown
NNPA News Wire Film Critic

"They want to hear you sing," says Rev. C.L. Franklin (Forest Whitaker) to his 10-year-old daughter Aretha (Skye Dakota Turner). And she did. Eventually singing herself into 25 Grammys, a posthumously awarded Pulitzer Prize Special Citation and the history books.

How Franklin became the Queen of Soul and loved by millions is the subject of this fairly detailed and very entertaining biofilm that charts her rise from childhood to 1972 and her making of the classic, live-recorded album, Amazing Grace.

This project stars Jennifer Hudson, the singer who was handpicked by Franklin to play her. Like a Queen anointing a princess, Franklin deemed: "I've made my decision, and it is you, young lady, who I want to play me." That endorsement makes this Respect the quintessential Franklin biodrama and any others, not so much.

Detroit 1952, ten-year-old Aretha is a precocious musical prodigy lauded by her dad C.L., loved by her grandmother (Kimberly Scott, The Abyss) and envied by her siblings. Years later as a young adult in the 1960s, Franklin (Hudson) tours churches with her father who watches her like a hawk, warding off suitors.

C.L. helps his daughter land a recording contract with Columbia Records in 1960, and Franklin releases jazz/pop-orientated albums to little success.

When she hooks up with hustler turned man-made a smart decision when they had the entire cast sing live.

It's a strategy that worked wonders for Les Misérables, and that directive gives the performances and recreated recording sessions an authenticity that enhances the artistry. Whitaker, Hudson, Turner and Audra MacDonald as the mother belt out songs.

Like a Queen anointing a princess, Franklin deemed: 'I've made my decision, and it is you, young lady, who I want to play me.' ager Ted White (Marlon Wayans), C.L. is peeved: "You are not leaving this family for that piece of trash!" Yet this is when Aretha finds her stride. She develops her own brand of soul music, which starts with the gospel/blues tinged "I Never Loved a Man," recorded with the Muscle Shoals Rhythm Band on Atlantic records in 1967. The rest is soul music history.

Director Liesl Tommy and the film's producers

Titus Burgess as Reverend Dr. James Cleveland, Franklin's musical mentor, Saycon Sengbloh as the adult sister Erma, Hailey Kilgore as sister Carolyn and Brenda Nicole Moorner as Brenda harmonize well.

Their voices are heavenly, making the songs feel richer. Classics like "Dr. Feelgood," "Think," "Ain't No Way," "Chain of Fools" and "Sweet Sweet Baby (Since You've Been Gone)" resonate so much the music carries the film over any rough spots.

The script by playwright-turned-screenwriter Tracey Scott Wilson, doesn't miss much in the star's formative years: Franklin's often strained relationship with her domineering dad, tween and teenage pregnancies, White's notorious spousal abuse and the singer's bouts with alcoholism.

The latter two plot points provide some of the film's highest drama, moments when Aretha was scarred for her life, humiliated in public and facing inner demons that put her on a path of self-destruction.

That human frailty is balanced by the exhilarating moments (recording her first hit), shows of courage (civil rights activism with MLK and supporting Angela Davis) and creative breakthroughs (watching the scenes where she arranges songs with the band is magic).

The characters, large and small, are well drawn with depth and dimension. The dialogue floats safely above a soap opera-ish feel.

Mom to her daughter: “Your daddy does not own your voice.”

For two hours and 25 minutes, tight editing (Avril Beukes, Queen Sugar), a constant influx of historical moments, rousing concert performances, interactions with famous people (Dinah Washington played by Mary J. Blige, Clara Ward by Heather Headley and Smokey Robinson by Lodric D. Collins) and Franklin's life journey will keep you entranced.

The production design (Ina Mayhew, Queen Sugar) aptly recreates the '50s, '60s and '70s. The eye-catching clothes (Clint Ramos, Lingua Franca) suit the characters and the times; their only imperfection is that they often look too new, not lived in.

Most of the ensemble performances are strong, with Hudson as the anchor and her singing as her strongest asset. While her acting cannot match that of a trained thespian (Viola Davis, Angela Basset) and her accent seems to waver at times, she does convey the emo-

TELEVISION ACADEMY FOUNDATION NAMES AMANI ROLAND CHIEF ADVANCEMENT OFFICER

The Television Academy Foundation today announced Amani Roland has been appointed its chief advancement. She started in her new position this past June.

As CAO, Roland will oversee the planning, development and execution of all Foundation fundraising initiatives to facilitate the ongoing growth of the nonprofit.

Prior to joining the Foundation, Roland served as head of philanthropy in North America for the University of Edinburgh. There, she solicited major gifts from individuals and corporations as well as developed the university's strategy for engaging alumni and volunteers across the Western regions of the U.S. and Canada.

Additionally, Roland held key fundraising posts at UCLA as the director of development for the UCLA Institute of American Cultures—including its Ralph J. Bunche Center for African American Studies signature research project "The Hollywood Diversity Report" and the Saint Louis Art Museum as major gifts officer for the museum's $145 million capital campaign.

Roland began her career in the television industry, holding posts in both program development and acquisitions at Discovery Networks, PBS and HBO.

"We are thrilled to welcome Amani Roland to the Foundation's executive team," said Cris Abrego, chair of the Television Academy Foundation. "Over the past year the Foundation has doubled the number of students served through its educational programs, and we look forward to her expertise in fundraising to support our rapid growth and also to secure funding for the preservation of our irreplaceable The Interviews: An Oral History of Television archive as we mark its 25th anniversary next year."

"RESPECT!"

tional trauma the star experienced in some very impressive scenes. Her interpretation of Franklin, when she sings, mimics her walk and gestures and displays that badass attitude captures the aura just right. Scenes in which Hudson wears an Afro wig and revels in her militant Young Gifted and Black phase are the ones when she looks most like Franklin.

Whitaker as the overbearing father who tests his daughter is appropriately irascible. Everyone who plays the sisters, young and old, sings and acts well. Marc Maron as the legendary record producer Jerry Wexler is sufficiently animated while Burgess as the musical director Rev. Cleveland shows just the right sensibility as Franklin's emotional foundation. If there is a weak link it is Marlon Wayans as the troubled and abusive husband Ted White.

His performance is tepid and shallow. A real pro, like the late Chadwick Boseman, would have taken this opportunity to turn White, a pivotal character, into a memorable, menacing persona. Wayans does not.

What's on view is so fascinating and the storyline so involving and consequential that when the film ends at Franklin's famous church concert, you wish there was more. This is where a traditional theatrical film format is lacking. The Queen of Soul had a life so rich and long it could fill a miniseries and still not touch all the breakthroughs, influential moments and endearing times that made her such an icon.

Still, her legacy has been captured in her records, a bio book Respect: The Life of Aretha Franklin and now in a film that captures her essence and dispenses it through the vocal pipes and the acting prowess of the one woman Franklin herself deemed worthy of telling her story. The entire production is reverential, but Jennifer Hudson should be particularly proud. She has done her job. She should take a bow. The Queen of Soul knew what she was doing.

In theaters starting August 13.

Samantha D. Montgomery named Artistic Inclusion and Community Engagement Director at First Stage

New role will help expand First Stage's Equity, Inclusion, Diversity and Justice efforts

First Stage is pleased to announce that Samantha D. Montgomery has been promoted to the newly created position of Artistic Inclusion and Community Engagement Director. Montgomery has held a long tenure with First Stage, working in many capacities including resident teaching artist, director and actor. She assumed her new role as of July .

In her new capacity, Samantha will work collaboratively with Artistic Director Jeff Frank and Director of Programming Julia Magnasco. She will lead First Stage's cross-departmental Equity, Diversity, Inclusion and Justice (EDIJ) team while acting as a resource, guide and strategic planner. She will also help First Stage continue its journey to become a fully inclusive, equitable and just community, one that values a diversity of perspectives, traditions, ideas and contributions.

Artistic Director Jeff Frank shared his thoughts about Samantha's new role at First Stage: "Over the past year Samantha has been leading our EDIJ committee and started to work alongside me in our efforts to connect with the community, as well as in looking at our audition processes and all things artistic.

"It became clear that she was serving a new, vital role for the company – to help us to engage more deeply with our community, to continue to lead the organization on our collective EDIJ journey and to play a significant role in ensuring that our programs and processes continue forward with a stronger focus/lens on EDIJ – and we are thrilled to formalize that role with this promotion.

"We are excited for Samantha and the growth that she will foster for our company and with our community."
