MILWAUKEE STREET RENAMED AFTER FAMED MARQUETTE ALUM, OLYMPIC GOLD MEDALIST AND U.S. CONGRESSMAN RALPH METCALFE!

Ceremony/festival held at Metcalfe Park Rising

Recently, Metcalfe Park Community Bridges (MPCB) renamed north 34th Street in honor of Ralph Metcalfe (1910-1978), Olympic gold medalist and Marquette University alum. On hand for the unveiling was Metcalfe's grandson, Nasser Metcalfe (pictured above, third from right), a resident of New York, who delivered remarks on behalf of the family. After the renaming ceremony, MPCB participated in the 'Milwaukee's Doors Open.' Residents and guests were treated to food, music, community vendors, yoga, live art and activities for youth. Also showcased was the Metcalfe Park mobile app tour. Metcalfe was America's leading sprinter from 1932-1934. At Marquette, he equaled the world record of 10.3 seconds in the 100-meter dash. At the 1932 Olympics in Los Angeles, earned a silver medal in the 100 meters with Eddie Tolan, though he and Tolan raced to a virtual tie. In the 1936 Olympics in Berlin, Germany, Metcalfe earned his third and fourth Olympic medals: a silver in the 200-meter (0.1 second behind the famed Jesse Owens) and a gold medal as part of the 4X 100 relay team. During his track career, Metcalfe equaled or bettered 13 world records. He later entered Chicago politics, serving on the Chicago Common Council (rising to president pro tempore), and served four terms in the U.S. House of Representatives, representing Illinois' First Congressional District. Metcalf also co-founded the Congressional Black Caucus, and introduced the congressional resolution officially establishing Black History Month.—Photos by Yvonne Kemp Northcott ladies honored for dedication and service to organization and community!

Northcott Neighborhood House surprised two of its administrators with a special honor and lunch recently for their service to the community-based organization and for successfully bringing back the Juneteenth Day festival in the midst of the pandemic.

Vanessa Johnson (shown above on the left), and Elizabeth Coggs (on the right) both received a token of appreciation from the organization for their tireless work in bringing back the festival that reorganizes the day when U.S. Union soldiers informed the last enslaved Blacks in Galveston, Texas in 1865 that the war was over and they were free.

Two years ago, both women joined Northcott and worked diligently—with other organizations such as Bader Philanthropes—to bring the festival back. Their hard work was evident in the positive outcome many saw in the resurrection of the event.

"Where ever I go, I hear the rave reviews of what an enjoyable and cultural time people had at Juneteenth for the past two years," said Northcott Executive Director and President of Juneteenth Tony Kearney, Sr.

Johnson is the director of development and Juneteenth vendor participation. Coggs, a former county and state legislator, is the director of operations for the organization and Juneteenth.

The 2021 and 2022 Milwaukee's Juneteenth Day celebration exceeded attendance, vendor goals, parade participation, entrepreneurship opportunities. The parade was aired live on television and streamed.

The 2022 Milwaukee was the 51st. Kearney said Juneteenth is a holiday all Americans should be celebrating and he invites everyone to come to the 2023 version and have a good time.

FIRST PERSON MKE Mayor CAVALIER JOHNSON addresses the challenges and tough decisions of proposed city budget!

"I have submitted the 2023 Milwaukee City Budget to the Common Council. It is founded in a commitment to the best possible service to our residents, fiscal responsibility, and a commitment to equity.

The city is tightly constrained by limited revenue. In fact, "constrained" is not the right word. We are hamstrung – forced to cut long-established services because we do not have the money we need. Simply put, our costs are climbing, and our revenue is flat.

Shared revenue, the partnership established more than a century ago between the state and local governments, is broken. If shared revenue had just kept pace with inflation, we would have $155-million more this year.

My budget continues the trend of fewer full-time positions. Since 2000, city government has cut more than 1,000 positions – for the most part those cuts have come among general city employees, rather than police.

Even with fewer employees, our costs continue to climb. Inflation affects us. And, the most noteworthy climbing cost is our pension obligation. Police and fire pensions drive more than three-quarters of that obligation, and in the coming year, the pension price tag will reach $100-million.

Next year, the total city budget will be approximately $1.7-billion, and the total tax levy will be up by two-percent. For a home at the city's median value, the combination of taxes and fees will increase by about $48.60.

I have pressed every department receiving taxpayer money to find ways to cut back.

There is no higher priority – and no larger investment of city resources – than the work to increase public safety. The scale of our investment is reflected in this fact: the budget of the Milwaukee Police Department is close to the city's entire property tax levy.

We are all aware of the alarming increase in fatal shootings, and that is an important determinant of the public's perception of safety. What gets less attention is the drop in other categories of serious crime compared to last year. Serious crime in Milwaukee, overall, is down more than ten-percent from 2021 to 2022.

The reasons behind the lower crime numbers are many, and they certainly include good police work, stronger partnerships to reduce crime, holding criminals accountable; and engaging family members, friends, neighbors, preachers, teachers, and mentors to step up. These are policies I have advanced, and we are seeing some positive results.

If our financial standing were better, I would favor adding more officers to Milwaukee's police department.

My proposed budget reduces sworn police strength by one percent. At the same time, we continue the trend of having civilians perform work previously done by officers in functions such as crime analysis and dispatching. I want as many sworn officers as possible on the streets.

Basic city services remain an essential priority in my proposed budget. We still have to collect the garbage, plow the snow, fight the fires, fill the potholes, and respond to pandemics. We still need to conduct elections, attract business, and enforce our building codes. We have a city to run.

So, I am looking to sustainable revenue solutions for the city's fiscal predicament, and those solutions are only possible with action from Madison. That is where my attention has been focused.

The decisions we make in this budget, and in all our work, reflect the values we share. I am focused on the people of Milwaukee and their expectations of city government. I am committed to equity, inclusion, and respect. I embrace the trust our residents have placed in us with a commitment to integrity and honesty.

The Common Council has started formally reviewing my proposed budget. Fundamentally, we all agree to provide basic city services, to prepare our city for the future, and to maintain a quality of life all of Milwaukee deserves.

Nevertheless, in the budget process, we must face the facts. Insufficient resources have forced cuts and limited our ambitions for city government. This coming year we will work through the financial restrictions, and I am optimistic the future will bring the change we need."

VP Kamala Harris talks abortion, appeals to voters during recent MKE visit!

Vice President Kamala Harris met with college students and Latino leaders in Milwaukee on recently, a visit meant to energize voters just under seven weeks before an election in which Democratic Gov. Tony Evers and Republican U.S. Sen. Ron Johnson are on the ballot.

Harris also spoke at a meeting of the Democratic Attorneys General Association, urging them to "fight back" for abortion rights and against those she called "extremist, so-called leaders" who were attempting to make it harder to vote.

Harris singled out Democratic Attorney General Josh Kaul, who is up for reelection in November, for filing a lawsuit to challenge Wisconsin's 1849 abortion ban that has no exceptions for rape or incest.

"Josh, our administration has your back," she said to applause.

Harris also faulted Republicans pushing laws making it more difficult to vote and backing "sham audits" into the 2020 presidential election results.

Mayor Johnson Signs Resolution to Advance Homes MKE Initiative
The Common Council unanimously approved development team selections for Homes MKE initiative that will build stronger neighborhoods in city

Following unanimous approval from the Milwaukee Common Council, Mayor Cavalier Johnson signed File #220656, a resolution selecting the development teams for the Homes MKE initiative that will renovate vacant City-owned residential properties in Milwaukee.

The resolution also authorizes the property sales to the selected development teams, as well as the housing rehabilitation and workforce subsidies that will be deployed to carry out this new initiative and help build stronger neighborhoods throughout the city.

“Growing up in Milwaukee, I experienced the effects of housing insecurity like many residents and families currently are. This is personal for me, so I am proud to work with the Milwaukee Common Council and our development partners to deploy the Homes MKE initiative and revitalize vacant residential properties into renovated homes,” said Milwaukee Mayor Cavalier Johnson.

“This is the power of partnerships on full display. Together, we are building stronger neighborhoods, promoting homeownership, and working to ensure every Milwaukeean has access to the quality, affordable housing they need.”

The selected development teams are a mix of emerging developers, for-profit developers, and non-profit developers.

They include: Acts Community Development, Advanced Investors, FIT Investment Group, LLC/Westcare Wisconsin, Inc., Maures Development Group, One 5 Olive/Milwaukee Community Land Trust, Rico

Love Foundation LLC/Mayfield Properties, Strong Blocks, CME Development, LLC, Even Life, Inc., Ezekiel Community Development, Metcalfe Park Community Bridges, Servant Manor, T.A.S. Solutions, LLC, Walnut Way Conservation Corp./Silicon Pastures II, LLC, and Walters Renovations, LLC.

Through a competitive RFP process, these development teams were selected to work with the Department of City Development (DCD) and community partners to renovate vacant City-owned residential properties in Milwaukee.

DCD will now execute development agreements with the selected teams and begin implementation of Homes MKE.

In 2021, Mayor Cavalier Johnson and members of the Milwaukee Common Council allocated $15 million in federal American Rescue Plan Act funding to DCD for the Homes MKE program. This effort will renovate vacant houses in the City’s inventory of tax-foreclosed residential properties and return them to productive use.

The goals of Homes MKE are to:
Sell, renovate and reoccupy a minimum of 150 vacant foreclosed City-owned houses;

Prioritize the development of the houses to provide homeownership opportunities for City residents; Coordinate redevelopment efforts that result in a positive impact for the surrounding neighborhood; Provide construction and job opportunities; Provide development opportunities for emerging developers; and Collaborate with local residents to provide housing and resource opportunities in neighborhoods where Homes MKE properties are located.

passed numerous bills that would have made it more difficult to vote absentee, but Evers vetoed all of them. Republicans also approved an investigation into the 2020 election that did not turn up any evidence to question President Joe Biden’s victory in the state. Assembly Speaker Robin Vos fired the investigator, former Wisconsin Supreme Court Justice Michael Gableman, last month.

“Today, our nation faces many threats to our rights and to our freedoms and we must stand united,” Harris said.

The vice president also met with students and met privately with local Latino leaders at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee in an attempt to energize two groups that don’t always turn out to vote.

About 7.6% of Wisconsin’s population identifies as Hispanic or Latino, according to the 2020 census. The largest concentration is centered in Milwaukee and spills over into nearby Kenosha and Racine counties.

In 2020, however, Latinos made up an estimated 3% of Wisconsin voters, according to AP VoteCast. That figure suggests there are plenty of eligible Latinos not voting in support of either party.

This election cycle, both parties are focusing their efforts on gaining the support of Latino voters in Milwaukee, the state’s largest Democratic stronghold.

Before Harris’ visit, state GOP leadership and the party’s candidate for attorney general condemned the Biden administration for rising inflation and crime rates. They spoke at the Republican National Committee’s Hispanic Community Center on Milwaukee’s south side.

The RNC opened its Hispanic Community Center in Milwaukee more than a year ago as part of nationwide efforts to reach minority voters, and it’s been holding “election integrity” events there since June that are aimed at recruiting partisan poll watchers.

“The Hispanic community is very conservative both fiscally and socially,” said Preya Samsundar, the GOP’s communications director for the Midwest. She added that the community center’s door-knocking efforts and events have been successful so far in bringing Latino voters into the Republican Party.

But despite the party’s efforts, just a mile down the road in a small Puerto Rican café and restaurant on the south side, voters knew little of the Hispanic Community Center or who was on the ballot this year.

“I really don’t know the people who are running, and sometimes I think that nothing’s going to change,” said Juan Ortiz from behind a bakery display stocked with traditional Puerto Rican pastries.

Ortiz said he has cast ballots for Republicans and Democrats, but he only votes in presidential elections.

His reason is simple and represents the challenge both parties face mobilizing voters this year: “I think whoever’s in the top controls the whole thing. It doesn’t matter what whoever wants to do if they’ve got to ask the big people.”

JEALOUS

By Ben Jealous

Truth is a threat to authoritarianism. Reading is a path to truth. That's why the freedom to read is essential to the freedom to learn. And that's why the freedom to learn is often attacked by those who abuse power and those who cling to it.

Every year, the American Library Association and partner organizations observe Banned Books Week to highlight and push back against these threats.

This year's Banned Books Week ran from Sept. 18-24 amidst a wave of book bans and other attempts to restrict what people can learn.

These efforts have a long and dishonorable history.

NAACP says Jackson's water problems are civil rights issue

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — In a federal complaint Tuesday, the NAACP said Mississippi officials "all but assured" a drinking water calamity in Jackson by depriving the state's majority-Black capital city of badly needed funds to upgrade its infrastructure.

The organization asked the Environmental Protection Agency to investigate the state's alleged pattern of steering money to white communities with less need.

The group said the state's refusal to fund improvements in Jackson culminated in late August when the water system suffered a near-total collapse after a heavy rainstorm.

Over 25 years, it said, Jackson received funds from an important federal program only three times. When Jackson tried to fund improvements itself, those efforts were repeatedly blocked by Mississippi state political leaders, according to the complaint.

NAACP president Derrick Johnson lives in Jackson and joined other local residents in filing the complaint with the EPA under Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which forbids anyone who receives federal funds from discriminating based on race or national origin.

In the past, this part of the law has rarely been used on environmental matters, but the Biden administration has promised to step up enforcement in communities overburdened by pollution.

"Jackson's majority-Black population has been repeatedly ignored, spurned, or ridiculed, resulting in the most recent water access inequity and crisis," the NAACP said.

The group wants the EPA to make sure that from now on federal funds are distributed equitably.

The U.S. Justice Department is working to improve Jackson's water system. If a voluntary improvement plan isn't reached with the city, the department threatened Monday to file legal action under a different law, the Safe Water Drinking Act, which regulates harmful substances in tap water. The city has repeatedly violated this law in recent years.

There were warnings the Jackson water system was struggling before it failed. Roughly 300 boil-water notices were issued over the previous two years. Racism and neglect created a particularly bad situation in the city.

EPA Administrator Michael Regan visited the community Monday to talk to city officials and ensure they can "deliver long overdue relief for Jackson residents."

Mississippi Gov. Tate Reeves, a Republican, has blamed Jackson's water problems on mismanagement by city leaders. Reeves declared an emergency for the water system in late August and brought in out-of-state crews to help make repairs.

Before the city's latest water crisis, though, Reeves expressed his own opposition to state funding for Jackson water improvements, saying he wants to hold down Mississippi's overall debt level.

The Biden administration has several other environmental civil rights investigations open. The Justice Department is looking into how local and state officials in Alabama allowed chronically bad wastewater problems to fester in majority-Black Lowndes County, and for the first time the EPA initiated its own investigation into Colorado's air program.

More than 80% of Jackson residents are Black and roughly a quarter live in poverty. About a decade after the public schools integrated in the 1970s, white flight began. Mississippi's largest city now

Are you an ‘Irrelevant Negro’

(Editor's note: As we have this entire month, we are featuring random 'Signifyin' columns to commemorate our 46th anniversary. The following was written in 2005)

'The hardest task for a Black minister today is to give a eulogy for an irrelevant Negro.'

Such was the profound statement of Rev. Al Sharpton during a recent segment of the Tom Joyner Show. Sharpton's statement wasn't meant to disparage Black Americans, nor an indictment against engaged activists. Instead, Rev. Sharpton's assessment was a reflective apothegm that has lingered in my mind since he uttered the words more than a month ago.

struggles with a shrinking tax base.

Denecka Samuels, a mother of six children, lives in one of the poorest parts of Jackson. When water was not flowing from the tap, she said she had to fetch it from a barrel and cart it home to bathe her children. Samuels said frequent boil-water notices also make life much harder.

"It's a constant struggle," Samuels said. "I have to keep reminding my younger kids, 'Do not drink the water out of that faucet.' ... They're young and they don't understand."

Samuels was among several people who spoke Monday evening at a Poor People's Campaign protest to bring attention to Jackson water problems. The event was near the Governor's Mansion.

"I did not choose to be Black. I did not choose this life to not have no water," Samuels said. "It chose me."

In addition to her family responsibilities, Samuels said she has been working with the Poor People's Campaign to distribute bottled water to Jackson residents.

It is crucial for water systems to maintain pressure so that untreated groundwater doesn't seep into cracks in the pipes. After heavy rain, the quality of water entering Jackson's treatment plants changed, which the system couldn't handle, causing a drop in pressure. Residents were told to boil water to kill potentially harmful bacteria.

Officials lifted Jackson's citywide boil-water notice Sept. 15, nearly seven weeks after it was issued. But new boil-water notices have been issued for several neighborhoods within the city since then because of broken pipes.

In other legal actions earlier this month, four Jackson residents filed a proposed class action against current and former local officials, an engineering firm and a business contracted to replace water meters. They want lead pipes and equipment replaced and the system fixed, plus damages.

The EPA said it would decide whether to investigate within 25 days.

the stereotype that Black people don't read or write.

She could pen an article about the positive aspects of Black culture, stressing time-tested values and mores.

She could speak about the importance of education, civic involvement in the war on crime, or maybe how the cancer of drugs has impacted our community.

Maybe she could add her voice to the growing cry to end the war in Iraq, call for systemic changes in the biased criminal justice system, or advocate for universal health care.

Who knows, someone will be drawn to action by her comments. Maybe people will join her in reshaping Black America or be motivated to walk a more progressive path.

Even though she is confined to her apartment, that doesn't mean she is isolated from the world outside her door. She can make many contributions, sharing knowledge, wisdom, and insight with someone who needs guidance.

If she were to die tomorrow---God forbid---I asked, how would she be remembered; what contributions will people attribute to her? What would her obituary say beyond her birthday and time of death?

'Do you want to be remembered as an 'Irrelevant Negro?' Or will they say your 'footstep in the sand changed the course of the mighty ocean?'

All those little things add up, and every action changes the world around you.

"Do something today to ensure your relevancy."

I told her that over 2,500 people showed up for my son Malik's funeral.

Though only 27, he had made a significant impact on our community.

He was a teacher, mentor, and surrogate father to hundreds of children.

He was a member of BAEO and awarded the title of 'emerging Black leader.

Malik was politically active and advocated an Africentric paradigm instilled through our trip to Africa and his participation in dozens of rallies and campaigns.

He was at my side as we waged a protest in freezing temperatures to protest Capital Marine Bank's refusal to honor the King Holiday. You may not have heard about our successful effort because the NAACP, which refused to protest with us, nonetheless took credit.

During his funeral at Messmer High School gym, dozens of people lined up to espouse his virtues and impact on their lives.

Malik was definitely a 'Relevant Negro.'

What about you?

Given that this is Black History Month, it seems an appropriate opportunity to reflect on your life within the context of our universal quest for civil and human rights?

Black History Month is essentially about paying tribute to relevant Negroes. But it should also be used to assess what we have done with the tools and opportunities they provided us.

Black and African American heroes stare back from the pages of Black History books to ask us if we are Relevant Negroes; have we used our abilities and energies to continue the fight. Or have we become part of the problem through our apathy, myopia, and ignorance.

From their graves, King, (Friedrick) Douglass and (Nat) Turner, and others are asking the question: Are you a Relevant Negro?

How would you be remembered if you joined them tomorrow?

Could the minister who eulogizes you (if you know one) say that you were active in community work and achieved something significant professionally or socially?

Will he say you were an engaged member of a church, that you served as a role model, or that you demonstrated your care for our community?

Did you take the baton; continue the trek to move Black America closer to the Promised Land? Or were you just standing on the sidelines?

Martin Luther King, Jr. once said we all may not be great, but we can all serve and contribute. And through those contributions, we are significant and essential in the overall scheme. It is those contributions that add relevancy to our lives.

Maybe I'm wasting valuable space in this week's newspaper. Perhaps relevancy isn't essential to you. Maybe just saying you were a brother, sister, or unassuming neighbor is enough for you. Smoke a joint, fornicate, make irrelevant babies, steal a car, or sell drugs.

Those close to you may remember you as a kind-hearted person, a good brother or sister, a son or daughter, or a parent. You worked a non-descript job, enjoyed sports, and cut your grass (weeds) every time the city cites you.

That's fine.

But I think God gave each of us a talent and a task.

Each of us is supposed to leave this world a better place. Not striving to improve your life, the lives of your children, and your community is to waste your life; it means you just exist.

I've written hundreds of obituaries over the years. I sometimes will get information from a surviving family member and will try, frequently in vain, to stretch it out to more than two sentences.

There must be more to the story than that a person was born, lived unassumingly, and then died. A 50-word obituary is better than nothing, I guess.

But it says something about a person's relevancy if you can't go beyond two sentences.

There have been many cases where I've tried to put together an obit that takes up a paragraph but merely notes his survivors.

I was even asked once to write an obit for a young thug who was killed while trying to rob somebody. He was a dropout who sold drugs, fathered babies that he would never raise, and was feared by elderly neighbors.

Had I been truthful, I would have written that he lived a wasted life; his Neckbone mother was a poor parent and didn't instill in him the values and mores that define our culture. His Neckbone sperm donor was never around.

Instead, I let the minister earn his honorarium. Maybe he could create a eulogy for that Irrelevant Negro.

I've reached the age where I'm thinking more and more about my legacy and how my children will remember me. I don't plan on leaving them a pot of gold, but I hope to leave them something more lasting.

They will be able to say that I worked hard for my community and tried to empower Black people. That I served my church, my family, and my community.

My children will hopefully know that I always tried to carry myself as a role model.

I'm sure some people don't like my Black nationalistic philosophy, but most of them respect me, which is essential because they recognize that we may be on different trains, but on the same track.

My children will know I was a soldier---lieutenant-- in the civil rights army. I never wavered from my obligation to the community, our African-centered culture, and our unique relationship with God.

I admit I stumbled more than a few times in my life, but I never fell. I've always felt that stumbling was essentially 'falling forward faster.' Thus I grew from my mistakes.

They will be able to say that I left the world a little better than before my arrival. That I worked hard to make myself relevant.

What about you? Are you an Irrelevant Negro?

meaningful this year. In addition to the librarians, authors, book-sellers, teachers, and other anti-censorship activists who lead Banned Book Week activities, all of us have a role to play in ensuring the voices of our communities are not silenced.

Books by and about Black people and other people of color — and by and about LGBTQ people — dominate the ALA’s annual list of most frequently chal-lenged books.

This year’s honorary chairman, George Johnson, is an award-winning Black author whose “All Boys Aren’t Blue” is high on the list of books most challenged last year, along with others dealing with racism, racial identity, and sexuality.

“This is a fight for the truth that has always existed even if it rarely gets told,” Johnson says. “When the youth are empowered with stories about the experiences of others, they become adults who understand the necessity for equity and equality and have the tools to build a world the likes of which we have never seen.”

But far-right activists tell par-ents that words like “equity” are code for Marxism and something they should fight.

Trump Republicans are encour-aging MAGA activists to take over their school boards by run-ning propaganda campaigns about “critical race theory.”

Trumpish state legislators are introducing laws to make it illegal to teach anything that might make white students experience “dis-comfort.”

One Texas lawmaker demanded information from schools on 850 books he thought were suspect; his list included works on history and human rights.

In Virginia, Gov. Glenn Young-kin set up an email hotline for people to report teachers sus-pected of “divisive” practices.

Books targeted in the current war on truth include a memoir by Ruby Bridges, which tells the true story about her walking through angry mobs when she was a six-year-old who became the first Black student to attend a New Or-leans elementary school that had previously been off-limits to non-white students.

This is an important part of our history. We cannot build a future together if we are not willing to honestly face the truth about our past and our present.

Banned Books Week is a good time to commit ourselves to de-fending the freedom to read, teach, and learn about our history — and to opposing those who want to make it illegal to teach about that history or make it im-possible for educators to do so without being smeared and harassed.

Ben Jealous serves as president of People For the American Way and Professor of the Practice at the University of Pennsylvania. A New York Times best-selling au-thor, his next book “Never Forget Our People Were Always Free” will be published by Harper Col-lins in December 2022.
