Barnes loses tight senate race to Johnson, Evers defeats Michels to retain governorship; Moore re-elected, keeps congressional seat!

ELECTION WATCH 2022 THE RESULTS!

You know that 'Red Wave' Republicans nation-wide and in Wisconsin boasted about-and political pundits confidently predicted- in the 2022 mid-term elections this past Tuesday...it didn't happen!

What was supposed to be 'the wave' that would sweep a large number of Republicans in offices for governor, congress and senate was a modest ripple as Democratic political candidates fared much better than predicted in Tuesday's elections for Congressional and gubernatorial seats across the nation.

In Wisconsin, Gov. Tony Evers retained his office, defeating Republican businessman Tim Michels to keep this battleground state under a Democratic governor as the 2024 presidential election hovers on the horizon.

The re-elected governor told voters during his victory speech that democracy was on the line and on the ballot with Michels,

Stacy Abrams

Stacy Abrams loses second bid to lead Georgia, Maryland elects a Black governor, Warnock and Walker head for run-off!

Georgia Democratic gubernatorial challenger Stacy Abrams lost her second bid to become the first Black woman governor in America to incumbent Republican Gov. Brian Kemp.

Abrams, 48, a former state representative, lost her first bid for the governorship to Kemp in 2018.

Abrams collected 1,909,496 votes (45.8%). Kemp garnered over two million (53.4% of the total votes cast for that race.)

In her speech to supporters Tuesday night, in which she conceded to Kemp, Abrams said her efforts in the two elections against Kemp were not in vain, saying her fight allowed people to imagine a different state.

"I may no longer be seeking the office of governor, but I will never stop doing everything in my power to make sure the people of Georgia have a voice."

Since her first loss four years ago, Abrams has spent since been laying the groundwork for another run. She formed a forceful voting rights advocacy group—Fair Fight Action—and built her own personal wealth as Democrats gobbled up her books and paid to attend her speeches.

Her national profile was so high, that she was considered as a possible running mate for Biden or even a candidate for president herself.

That helped Abrams out raise Kemp with the help of a state law that allows candidates for governor to accept unlimited contributions through an associated committee.

Abrams raised $85 million through September 30, which is a record for Georgia political campaigns. Describing her campaign as one "rife with plans," she touted a big pay raise for teachers, legalizing casino and sports gambling to pay for more college aid, expanding Medicaid health insurance, aiding small and minority-owned businesses, and making housing more affordable.

At the same time, Abrams pledged to tighten Georgia's gun laws and roll back abortion restrictions, arguing Kemp was far from moderate. "The state of Georgia, the people of Georgia, deserve more," Abrams said Tuesday.

There is a famous saying: "It's never over until it's over!"

National Pulse round-up of key 2022 mid-term elections

Val Demings

Well the race for the Georgia U.S. Senate seat between incumbent senator and minister Raphael Warnock and Republican challenger, former college and professional star football player Herschel Walker is NOT over... yet!

It's now headed to a December 6 runoff. That's because neither candidate surpassed the 50% threshold to win the race outright Tuesday.

It may well become—again—a critical runoff with the senate majority hanging in the balance. There are still votes outstanding in Nevada and Arizona Senate races.

When the Associated Press called the race Wednesday afternoon, Warnock had secured 49.4 percent of the vote, Walker had 48.5 percent. Libertarian candidate Chase Oliver had won 2.1 percent of the vote.

The support both candidates got during the election suggests that the runoff is poised to be a close contest as well.

Given historical trends in the state as analyzed by 'FiveThirtyEight,' the Republicans candidate has typically seen gains during runoffs, though that dynamic was reversed in 2020 when

Raphael Warnock

Democrats—including Warnock and fellow Democratic Georgia Senator Jon Ossoff—expanded their margins to capture two Senate seats and flip Senate control to Democrats.

Wes Moore, a former combat veteran and former CEO of one of the nation's largest anti-poverty organizations, became Maryland's first elected Black governor.

Moore defeated Maryland Republican Delegate Dan Cox. With 89 percent of the votes counted Wednesday, Moore owned nearly 60 percent of them.

Moore's running-mate Aruna Miller will also make history as the first immigrant (from India) and woman of color to be elected that state's lieutenant governor.

Moore, 43, who is also the son of an immigrant, acknowledged what the moment means for his personal journey.

"And it is not lost on me that I've made history here tonight, too. But I also know I'm not the first one to try. This is just more proof that progress is possible in Maryland. And I am humbled to be part of this legacy," said Moore.

A Rhodes scholar, Moore is also the bestselling author of

Cheri Beasley

"The Other Wes Moore," which compares the life of two Black boys (one of them the now governor-elect) who have similar backgrounds, but two different fates (one successful, and the other caught up in the culture of poverty and prison) and the importance of individual decisions alongside community support.

Florida Congresswoman and U.S. Senate challenger Val Demings fell short in her effort to unseat incumbent Florida U.S. Senator Marco Rubio.

Demings faced an uphill battle in challenging a Republican incumbent.

Florida is also regarded as a key battleground state that has become more Republican in recent years and a site for controversial restrictions on discussions of race and LGBTQ+ issues in schools.

Demings had to contend with the challenges Black women face being elected to statewide positions.

The country has never had a Black woman governor, and only two Black women have ever served in the U.S. Senate.

There are currently no Black women in the Senate.

Demings is a former chief for the Orlando Police Department who has served Florida's 10th Congressional District in the U.S. House since 2017. She significantly outtraised Rubio, amassing more than $72 million, 53 percent of which came from small individual donations less than $200.

Democrat and former North Carolina state Supreme Court Chief Justice Cheri Beasley lost her bid to become the first Black woman elected statewide for federal office in that state's history, losing to North Carolina Republican Congressman Ted Budd.

Beasley could only garner 47.1 percent of votes (1,756,838) to Budd's 50.7 percent (1,892,104).

Both were contending for the senate seat being vacated by Republican Richard Burr. If she had won, Beasley would have been the only Black woman in the Senate.

The last Black woman senator is now the vice president of the United States, Kamala Harris.

Beasley, 56, was first appointed to the North Carolina Supreme Court as an associate justice in 2012 and was appointed as chief justice in 2019, making her the first Black woman to serve as chief justice on the state's highest court.

ernor's campaign is committed to "making sure every vote is counted.

"We will wait and see what the Wisconsin voters have decided after all their voices are heard."

But at 10:23 a.m., NBC News reported Johnson won re-election to his third term. Political observers credited a successful rebrand and unrelenting attacks against Barnes on crime and criminal justice issues as key to helping Johnson's standing among voters.

The final vote tally: Johnson received 1,334,670 votes (50.5%) to Barnes' 1,307,296 votes (49.5%).

In other key races, incumbent Democratic Congresswoman Gwen Moore defeated (again) Republican challenger Tim Rogers. Moore garnered 192,226 votes (75.4%) to Rogers 57,660 votes (22.6%). Independent candidate Robert Raymond had 5,165 votes (2%).

Incumbent Democratic Wisconsin Atty. General Josh Kaul defeated Republican challenger Eric Toney, a district attorney in Fond du Lac.

Kaul received 1,329,852 votes (50.7%). With the re-election to a second term, Kaul will be responsible for overseeing high-profile challenges to federal and state laws and implementing the way the state handles the 1849 law that bans most abortions.

Sara Rodriguez will replace Barnes as Lt. Governor. She beat Republican state Senator Roger Roth. She garnered 1,331,253 votes (51.5%) to Roth's 1,253,025 (48.5%).

Though the state's voter turnout was near record levels, it was not reflected in Milwaukee, where there was 40,000 fewer voters, mostly Black.

It took me 22 minutes and 14 seconds to convince the young brother to vote in yesterday's elections.

And I didn't waste his time selling him on which wing of the political bird to put White restaurant table hot (tabasco) sauce on. You may as well smother it with a bit of salsa because it will never taste as good as what you expect at a soul food restaurant or home.

The young brother is in his mid-30s and has voted in two presidential elections and many local races.

The emergence of Barack Obama in 2008 ignited a fire under him, and he eagerly took three buses to his polling place to cast his first ballot.

However, he acknowledged during our conversation that the Obama presidency turned out to be more about symbolism than substance.

Six years later, he remains disillusioned as his station in life and that of his fellow villagers had changed only minimally.

Obama was regal, articulate, and resourceful. He was an excellent role model and pulled off the seemingly impossible with his Affordable Care Act. He put more brothers and sisters on the bench and in policy-making positions than any president in history (and 'His-story').

By any measure, he was the best of the 20th century. But little of his policies filtered down, even as we watched the president earmark millions to bail out banks and the auto industry.

But what about us? He asked?

Disengaged, the brother surmised it was business—partisan politics-- as usual, a reality in which we are mere pawns for someone else's agenda. The 'when the tide comes in, all ships rise' slogan ignored those of us on cardboard rafts? Again.

Obama's agenda did not include anything significant to address the social, economic, and educational crisis faced by our village, he explained. If nothing else, the first Black president could have used his executive privilege to order dentures to affirmative action, an extraction performed by President Bill Clinton. Almost importantly, Obama could have supported reparations, a symbolic gesture redefining our struggle.

The brother stayed home in 2016, feeling Hillary Clinton took Black folks for granted and offered nothing of substance to hold on to.

Obviously, the brother did not comprehend what Donald Trump would do to his country.

He felt guilty for indirectly contributing to the election of 45IQ, but his renewed interest in the Joe Biden/Trump election wavered when the lifelong politician redefined Blackness in his image.

Biden's statement that being Black meant you had to vote Democrat was consistent with his wishy-washy positions on 'Black' issues over the decades.

The brother was likewise frustrated with state and local government and the politicians Black folks support with the hope of systemic change.

With African Americans in control of city and county governments, it should be possible to follow the lesson plan of Atlanta Mayor Maynard Jackson and, empower the Black community, demand our share of the pie.

Unfortunately, Milwaukee is not Atlanta. Our Black political leadership is fragmented by egotism and manipulation from the controlling underwriters. While directionless Black politicians remain splintered (the common council presidency vote revealed the cultural conflict), our situation worsened.

There was little doubt nothing would change when Alderman Cavalier Johnson was elected council president without a single Black vote.

Tellingly, he reportedly did not receive any support from his 'Hue-men' peers as he launched his campaign for mayor. In fact, one of his colleagues even went so far as to endorse his White conservative opponent.

It's essentially been downhill since. Instead of addressing the pressing problems---economic and educational apartheid---Black elected officials have either hidden their heads in the sand or pointed fingers.

We would probably feel better if they jointly held a press conference and admitted they didn't have viable solutions and needed help.

Instead, Milwaukee makes headlines every week for being the worst city in a dozen categories, revealing our powerlessness and the disconnect of our political leaders.

No wonder Black kids with degrees and ambition head out of state, and older middle-class tribal members move to the suburbs and put their children in private schools.

When combined with the status of local politics, many of those at the bottom viewed themselves in the same light as 'freed slaves'

BLACK POLITICAL 'LEADERSHIP' AND THE STATE OF BLACK 'POLITRICKS'!

when President Andrew Johnson rescinded reconstruction policies and helped create the KKK.

This is why I explained to the brother the reason Nyame (God) gave Black people big lips.

We've been biting those bar-b-que catchers since we arrived here as slaves in 1526 (not 1619, as they would have you believe).

This was not the first time I had to convince a fellow Hue-man to vote.

I encountered a similar scenario a few years earlier and, like that prior occasion, explained the importance of our vote in electing like-minded people who put us before the political party and who will not water down our agenda.

The brother caught me off guard by noting my frequent statements that the Democrats and Republicans are essentially different wings on the same bird.

He followed by surprisingly noting my oft-repeated story about my life-altering political awakening during my tour in Vietnam.

That lesson centered around a poor Vietnamese farmer who revealed his family had made the potentially dangerous decision to have different sons join opposing sides in that country's civil war.

As the pee-poor farmer explained, he was among the invisible and forgotten before the 'civil' war.

When I first encountered him, he sorted through garbage cans behind the base mess tent, collecting food scraps to feed his family.

Generally, his family sustained themselves off rice and weeds (real ones). He said the scraps he collected—and often fought over—allowed him to occasionally put meat on the table (or floor).

From his perspective and lifestyle, which side won the war 'was irrelevant,' as 'reform' or new governments rarely impacted those on the bottom.

He said he was a faceless poor rice farmer before the conflict and would be an ignored poor rice farmer regardless of who won the war.

My conversation with the young brother included a diatribe about my frustration with the inability or unwillingness of any statewide or national candidates to address the issues of critical importance to our village.

As I've heard throughout the election season, the silence of the statewide candidates to address---much less offer solutions---for the pressing issues of the day has put Black voters in a disingenuous position. It's business as usual, with the undermining reason for showing up at the polls, is to vote against instead of for.

The Salvation Army To Host Red Kettle Kick-Off Friday

Red kettles will be out in Milwaukee County from November 11 to December 24

The Salvation Army of Milwaukee County will kick off its 2022 Red Kettle Campaign on Friday, November 11.

The annual kick-off will begin at 7 a.m. with an unveiling of our new holiday wrap covering Milwaukee's streetcar, The Hop (at the station outside the Milwaukee Public Market). It will then continue on the second floor of the Milwaukee Public Market with a ceremony announcing the 2022 goal and a full breakfast. The kick-off will include remarks from Cavalier Johnson, the Mayor of Milwaukee, and Major Steve Woodard, Area Commander for The Salvation Army of Milwaukee County.

The Salvation Army will also unveil its new tap to give™ solution at select red kettles this season.

“We are always looking for convenient ways for people to donate at the red kettles,” Woodard said. “As fewer people carry cash, we wanted to solve the common statement ‘I don’t have any cash,’ so we added a new tap to give™ system to the red kettles. All shoppers need to do is tap their credit card on the dollar amount ($5, $10, $20), and the dollar amount will appear on their credit card statement.

the Lone Ranger (not U.S. Marshall Bass Reaves, but the white replica) will come around the corner and save us.

In essence (and supported by early polls), the faithful and hopeful Black voters are motivated by fears of the alternative to the Democratic Party 'leadership' even though we have not progressed under the status quo.

How do you motivate our nation-leading poor Black tribal members who have heard nothing from senatorial or gubernatorial candidates about record inflation that has them drowning in a sea of despair?

Instead, the primary focus of the senatorial election has been about abortion (vs. women's health and equality), which is moot to families trying to figure out how to buy pampers and baby formula for their children who will also be trapped in a culture of poverty.

What does defunding the police (an actual misrepresentation of the initial proposal) mean to the elderly who have to hide behind newly installed bars on their windows?

Moreover, shifting police funding to mental health workers is nonsensical to people who question where police are as they dodge urban terrorists recklessly driving down our city streets as if they were at the Indianapolis Speedway.

As one senior told me recently, instead of having a social worker with a badge, why not shift the resources to parenting classes so the ‘punks’ and ‘punkettes’ will grow up with morals and values.

While both senatorial candidates provided sound bites about easing the burden on the middle class, how does that motivate an unemployed brother who can't afford to pay his $ 40-a-month child support for any of the 14 children he provided sperm for?

Milwaukee has the country's highest Black male unemployment rate, yet tell me the name of any candidate, from senator to dog catcher, offering a plan to address Black joblessness?

Every candidate for office assumes they get a pass because of the pandemic. But Milwaukee's nation-leading Black academic achievement failure and the highest male unemployment rate in the county existed before the pandemic.

If I were a one-issue voter, I would have stayed home yesterday because I haven't heard a single word pass the lips of any candidate about education.

I have reached the point where the conspiracy theorist in me has taken root. What other reason for ignoring the only path to escape poverty, dysfunctionality, and criminality?

That paradigm--educational apartheid-- benefits the party's primary supporters--teacher unions and poverty pimps.

Fueling my conspiracy beliefs is the lack of response from any candidate following the release of national data last month showing Milwaukee has the broadest academic achievement gap this side of the south pole.

In fact, not a single politician in the state called a press conference to express disappointment, not even so much as a commitment to focus resources on this tragedy.

I received several negative responses to my post two weeks ago when I asked if former President Barack Obama was cognizant that he was spearheading a get-out-to-vote rally at the worst of the worst educational institutions in the city, North Division high school, in a state marred by Black underachievement.

I had to take an aspirin to quell my headache from a couple of ‘die-hard Black Democrats’ who chastised me for asking my rhetorical questions, thus putting doubt in the minds of disillusioned voters.

No problem, I'm used to dodging rocks from the ‘Negrocracy.’

And if the criticism gave me a headache, I had a migraine from all the political ads and solicitations that flood the airwaves and emails.

It's bad enough that we're being dissed and ignored throughout this election. Still, the poison pill atop that American apple pie has been the relentless political ads that defy logic and common sense and insult our intelligence.

Between the innuendoes and unsubstantiated assertions, the commercials and ads left me looking forward to today---when the ‘B.S.’ will hopefully be replaced by reality show promotions and Snoop Doggy Dud beer and Shaq O'Neil insurance commercials.

Likewise, relief from all the donation solicitations. At the last count, I received 1,183 calls and emails seeking contributions from both parties.

For the record, I refuse to contribute without a guarantee of accomplishment beyond political rhetoric. And I have never received an answer to any inquiry.

The brother said he would vote, and I assume he did, despite his reservations. I convinced him that we had no choice. I left him with the Mardi Ballou quote: "Inch by Inch it's all a cinch, by the yard it's hard. Go for it -- no matter how slow or long the process initially seems."

That didn't bring a smile or relief to his face, but he at least accepted the fact while things are bad, by not voting, you could make matters worse.

THE MATH CLASSROOM ALL STUDENTS DESERVE

THE GATES FOUNDATION INVESTING MORE THAN $1 BILLION INTO MATH EDUCATION FOR BLACK AND LATINO YOUTH.

Close your eyes and imagine your eighth-grade math classroom. Some of you may be excited, but I suspect more of you are remembering that feeling of being anxious and lost. That’s how I felt!

Math class in eighth grade, or any grade for that matter, is a place where too many students have grappled with seemingly countless formulas, tests, and problems that appeared to have little application to the real world. It is not a place where they feel confident, supported, or even productive. Why is that the case? And how can we make math a rigorous and positive experience that sets students up for success both in school and in life?

At the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, we’ve been thinking a lot about math and how to answer those questions. Math is more than just a tool for getting a good job.

Math makes sense of the world and it is analytical thinking in action—the ability to understand patterns, problems, and challenges with ever increasing precision.

When students experience math in the way we know is possible and have seen in excellent math classrooms—as relevant and engaging—their interest, motivation, and persistence are evident. That is the math classroom we want all students to find themselves in.

The energy and engagement in this classroom are fostered by an enthusiastic and prepared teacher who is equipped with rigorous and engaging instructional materials. These supports inspire students, build their confidence, and give students a sense of agency.

In this classroom, the instruction is tailored to student needs. The teacher uses digital tools to personalize learning, making sure students get the help and practice in real time they need to master key concepts. The students also learn as a group, explaining their reasoning and discussing different ways to arrive at the answer to a problem. Whether they plan to be an engineer, coder, graphic designer, or nurse, students see math as a tool to make the world better. They also have a clear sense of the courses they need to take in high school and beyond to achieve their aspirations. This classroom is an inclusive environment, where every student feels like they belong. And they can see their interests reflected in the work they are doing, in a fun and interesting way.

And in this school, math teachers receive valuable preparation, mentoring, and professional learning aligned to the materials they use for instruction. Teachers are part of a broader community of math educators who work together to tailor instruction and share best practices.

Every student deserves this type of classroom. Every teacher deserves this kind of support. And there are places all over the country where this is happening already. But we want this to be the rule rather than the exception.

That’s why over the next 10 years, our work in K-12 education is going deeper in math. The Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation is not new to mathematics. For the past several years roughly 40% of our K-12 education budget has supported math instruction in a meaningful way. But now is the time for bolder and clearer focus. Unfinished learning resulting from the pandemic—and the equity and outcome gaps that it exacerbated—require us all to think differently about how we’re approaching math education.

This is especially true of those working on behalf of the students at the center of our efforts—Black and Latino students and students from low-income backgrounds—who even before the pandemic experienced inequitable access to qualified math teachers, advanced coursework, high-quality curriculum, tutoring and other resources necessary to serve the potential of every student. The stakes are real. While there are many factors impacting students’ opportunities and outcomes, research shows that students who pass Algebra 1 by 9th grade are twice as likely to graduate high school and are more likely to enroll and graduate with a bachelor’s degree and go on to well-paid careers. The most recent National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) data, which shows a sharp decline in math achievement for nearly all subgroups, reinforces the urgency of redoubling our math efforts.

Over the next 10 years, we will work with our partners to focus on a few key areas.

We’ll work with partners to improve math instruction by supporting the development and use of high-quality instructional materials that increase student motivation, engagement, and persistence. This is a critical need, as a nationally representative RAND survey found that a majority of educators believe their instructional materials are unengaging, un-motivating, and difficult to implement effectively.

Our investments will support efforts to increase the number of teachers who are prepared and equipped to provide high-quality math instruction. We will do this by continuing to invest in strong teacher prep programs and in ongoing, aligned, job-embedded professional learning for teachers.

We’ll partner with districts to help implement the practices, protocols, and systems changes most essential for strong math instruction. This includes accelerating the use of continuous improvement to implement systemic, coherent supports for math instruction. Our work with Networks for School Improvement over the past several years has underscored how critical it is for improvement efforts to be part of a school’s overall vision, operations, and practices.

And, we’ll continue to work with our education pathways partners to better align the math course pathways leading from high school to college so that students have more options to pursue their interests and aspirations and are better positioned for future success. This means building course pathways that move beyond the one-size-fits all march to calculus and give students the opportunity to rigorously explore other subject areas that are in demand, such as statistics and data science.

We will also continue to bridge the gap between research and practice—investing in a Research and Development and an innovation agenda and partnerships to develop new tools and breakthroughs that get translated into classroom practice.

With your help, we’re excited to build on the work we’ve done with partners over the last 20 years to better understand how to drive improvements in teaching and learning and support schools in those efforts. And we look forward to a time when all students can see themselves as “math kids”, learn in the math classroom they deserve, and use math as a tool to prepare them for the futures they envision for themselves.

Finances are different for everyone, and so are the life events we all go through. An emergency fund is your financial line of defense against life’s lemons. Although there are many financial rules of thumb, there is no “normal” way to handle your emergency fund.

The bottom line: saving money is the first line of defense to financial wellness, especially when the unexpected happens. While nobody can predict the future, everyone can prepare for it.

What is the reason for my emergency fund?

Your emergency fund is a safety net that can help you avoid getting into a difficult financial situation due to a loss of income or unexpected, one-time expenses.

Having one in place can reduce stress, anxiety, and other emotions that could make handling the non-financial aspects of an emergency much more difficult.

It may seem a little obvious that an emergency fund is for emergencies.

However, one of the challenging aspects of an emergency fund is knowing what expenses qualify as an emergency. However, you can

This fund’s sole purpose is to prepare you for costs that you cannot or would not typically plan out.

For example, oil changes and new tires are predictable vehicle expenses you should plan for in your regular savings.

However, you wouldn’t typically plan for costs that you could incur on the off chance that you need to make emergency home repairs or pay for emergency medical expenses. You would cover these from your emergency fund.

How much do I need?

How much would a new furnace cost? If you could not work, how much would you need to cover essential expenses until you could?

Asking yourself these kinds of questions will help you set a goal amount for your emergency fund.

The general rule of thumb is three to six months of essential expenses. However, you can always start with a goal you find achievable. Say $1,000. Once you reach that goal, aim for three months of rent, then three months of essential expenses, and so on.

Tracking your spending can help you estimate monthly expenses.

Completing this exercise can also help you figure out how much you can afford to save toward your emergency fund each month.

How do I save that much?

Start small: If you haven’t started, consider putting $25 from every paycheck into a savings account. Even a few dollars can make a big impact in the long run.

Check your budget or spending plan to see how much you can save after you’ve paid essential expenses and before budgeting for discretionary spending.

Keep it separate: Open a separate savings account to help you resist the temptation to dip into it. Remember, this account is for emergencies, so keep it away from your daily spending accounts and separate it from vacation and holiday savings. This method will help you stay organized, visualize your progress, and provide peace of mind.

Automate your savings: One way to automate is via direct deposit. You may be able to instruct your employer to deposit a portion of your paycheck directly into your emergency savings account every pay period.

Alternatively, you can set up an automatic transfer from your primary checking account to your emergency savings account on payday.

Both methods save you from adding a manual transfer to your to-do list that may be overlooked if things get busy!

Will I ever need to change the amount?

As your life changes, the amount you need in your emergency fund will change as well. It’s a good idea to revisit your emergency fund plan every six months or any time you experience a life event that impacts your income.

Marriage, starting or adding to your family, buying a home, and divorce are just a few examples of when you may need to increase your emergency fund.

A good savings plan can roll with the punches right alongside you!

How do I prioritize emergency savings against debt and other goals?

Deciding whether you should pay down debt, save for other goals, or grow your emergency fund is all about the big picture. Everyone has different financials, so that picture will vary person-to-person. What will impact you the most financially?

Paying down debt and saving money long term or having a plan B that allows you to keep making minimum payments if you lose income? There is no right or wrong answer.

Your emergency fund is there to help you expense the unexpected. So, make a plan and be ready for whatever comes your way!
