HEAT WAVE
(AND ONE TO REMEMBER)RECORD-BREAKING
HEAT WAVES ARE RISING AROUND THE COUNTRY AND THE WORLD! HERE ARE EIGHT WAYS TO BEAT THE HEAT!

Point blank: It's hot out. Very hot.

If the memes circulating declaring, "Don't invite me out, unless it's inside," aren't enough indication, it's ridiculously hot over a large portion of the country.

Temperatures are currently at least 10 digits above 100 F in roughly 79 cities throughout the country, including in Texas, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, and California. And that's just in the U.S.; cities worldwide are suffering through dangerous temperatures.

As reported by the Associated Press, the current heat wave has already claimed at least a dozen lives in Texas — a sad reminder that heat-related deaths are both possible and preventable.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, over 600 people die yearly from heat-related illnesses that could be avoided.

Given that stat, the fact that these heat waves are occurring primarily in states with large Black and brown populations, as well as increasing evidence that Americans may need to get used to extreme heat in the summer, here are eight things you should never do during a heat wave — and the one thing you should remain aware of if you want to stay safe in the heat.

Don't forget to check the weather

It's always a good idea to check the weather before finalizing plans for the day and to continue checking it throughout the day.

However, during a summer that has already featured flash floodings, repeated wildfire haze and now, deadly heat waves, it is not hyperbole to say checking the weather is a matter of survival.

Don't go outside during peak temperatures

Some regions experiencing heat waves start off with cooler mornings or end with cooler evenings. If that's the case in your area, use your time wisely by going outside earlier in the day and avoiding doing so during the hottest point, if possible.

Sorry, but that includes postponing parties, sporting events and outdoor activities. Either wait until a cooler point in the day or until the heat wave officially breaks.

Don't forsake A/C

With heat waves lasting weeks and temperatures in the triple digits, air conditioning is a human necessity. If you have it, now is the time to use it; if not, find a designated cooling center or other free public air-conditioned spaces (like libraries, shopping malls, community centers, churches etc.) to occupy during the hottest hours of the day.

Staffs in those public or religious spaces should also expect to see more people in the coming days as they attempt to stave off the heat, so please be compassionate.

Don't skimp on hydration

It should go without saying, but heat waves are very much "drink water and mind my business" situations.

Keep sipping nature's perfect recipe regularly throughout the day to stay hydrated, get some cooling relief, and keep sharpening your body's natural defenses against high temperatures.

Don't ignore feelings of illness

Headaches, stomachaches, nausea and sudden lethargy (as after a big meal) are all common, however, they could be infinitely more concerning during a heat wave.

Pay attention to your body and how you feel as you move about your day. If any unusual symptoms arise while outside, move to a cool place, preferably indoors, get some water and continue to monitor how you're feeling. Seek medical attention if your symptoms worsen.

Don't leave pets outside or unattended

As is true for you, a heat wave is not the safest time to take your pets outside. If you must, keep it short and sweet, keep water on hand, and stay with them.

Additionally, monitor your pets while temps remain high. If you see any signs of lethargy, excessive panting, or seeking shade, bring them inside or move them to a cooler place ASAP.

Remember, ground surfaces may be uncomfortably hot, so if your dog seems bothered by the pavement, move to a shaded or grassy area if possible.

Also, certain breeds may require more concern than others, so educate yourself on whether your pet has any heat-related risks.

There are several devices pet owners can use to help keep their pets cool, like cooling pads, ice cube toys, play pools and frozen treats. Lastly, avoid leaving pets in cars or indoors without A/C and access to fresh water.

Don't forget your sunscreen

As Katonya Breaux, the founder of Unsun, one of the first sunscreen brands for Black skin, reminded theGrio, all skin needs protection from the sun.

Melanin is not a substitute; Breaux noted even medium-dark skin tones only have natural protection from the sun for about roughly 10 minutes. We are all at risk during a heat wave, so grab your Black Girl Sunscreen, Super-Goop, Sun Bum, or what have you, and lather up — and make sure it's 30 SPF or higher.

EIGHT THINGS TO NEVER DO DURING A HEAT WAVE

Don't underestimate the heat

Whether your region is in the caution zone of the current advisory or the dangerous zone, please don't underestimate the high temperatures. Temperatures above 90 F are a concern for most, but even temperatures in the mid to high 80s can become dangerous if folks aren't careful.

Do know the differences between heat-related illnesses

Heat stress, heat exhaustion and heat stroke are all categories of heat-related illnesses with varying degrees of severity. According to Time magazine, all three conditions occur when the body's natural cooling systems are overwhelmed.

Don't underestimate the heat

Whether your region is in the caution zone of the current advisory or the dangerous zone, please don't underestimate the high temperatures. Temperatures above 90 F are a concern for most, but even temperatures in the mid to high 80s can become dangerous if folks aren't careful.

Do know the differences between heat-related illnesses

Heat stress, heat exhaustion and heat stroke are all categories of heat-related illnesses with varying degrees of severity.

According to Time magazine, all three conditions occur when the body's natural cooling systems are overwhelmed. Heat stress is categorized as anything from developing heat rash to dizziness or fainting spells. Heat exhaustion occurs when the body has become dehydrated, which can lead to nausea, vomiting, fainting, slurred speech, physical weakness, severe headaches, irritability, clammy skin and elevated body temperature. The much more dangerous of the illnesses, heat stroke, occurs when the core body temperature has risen above 104 F, and the body can no longer regulate its own temperature. Heat stroke can lead to loss of consciousness, seizures, shutdown of basic bodily functions, and ultimately death.

Victims of either heat stress, heat exhaustion, or heat stroke should cease outdoor activities, drink water, immediately try to get cooler (by removing clothes, using ice packs, or taking a cold bath or shower), and seek medical attention.

Be careful, stay hydrated, and keep cool.

The Carlee Russell situation will not stop me from believing Black women

OPINION: The Hoover police press conference has cast doubt on Carlee Russell's abduction story, but that doesn't mean other Black women shouldn't be believed.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is an op-ed, and the views expressed are the author's own.

Carlee Russell was missing for 49 hours before she returned home to her family Saturday night after reportedly being abducted from the side of the road on an interstate in Hoover, Alabama.

In a recent press conference, Hoover police revealed more details about the case.

Police said they only spoke with Carlee briefly upon her return Saturday evening, and they are looking to speak with her again to get more details about what happened in the 49 hours that she was missing after calling 911 to report seeing a white toddler walking along the side of the interstate.

OPINION: The Carlee Russell situation will not stop me from believing Black women

lee told them that when she got out of her car to check on the child, a white man with orange hair came out of the trees and told her he was checking on the child as well.

She said the man grabbed her, took her over a fence, and she was held captive in an 18-wheel tractor-trailer.

She allegedly told police she could hear a woman with the man, but she never saw the woman.

She also told police she heard a child crying but never saw the child either.

Police said Carlee told them she managed to escape at one point, but she was recaptured and then taken to a house and held captive there.

No details were given on how she escaped.

Police said no one else reported seeing a child on the side of the road, and there were no reports of a missing child.

Police also revealed that surveillance footage from her job at Woodhouse Day Spa showed Carlee taking a bathrobe and a roll of toilet paper from her job before leaving the night she disappeared.

Police said Carlee went to Target and bought snack foods, including Cheez-Its and granola bars.

Police said they reviewed her internet search history, and among the search terms they found were the following:

- How to steal money from a register without getting caught
- How much is a one-way bus ticket to Nashville
- Do you have to pay for an Amber Alert?
- How old is too old for an Amber Alert?
- Searches related to the Liam Neeson movie

Police said there were other search terms they found that they would not reveal.

The information in the news conference casts serious doubt on Carlee's story of being abducted, but it's not going to stop me from believing victims.

If anything, we should be happy that a missing Black woman got the level of national attention that Carlee did, and we should be advocating for that to happen

every time a Black woman or girl is missing.

Black women and girls do not get the same level of publicity or attention that missing white girls and women do.

This is a fact.

According to the National Crime Information Center, 268,884 women went missing in the year 2020, and of those, more than 90,000 were Black women and girls.

This means that while Black women represent

Carlee Russell

less than 15% of the entire U.S. population, they made up more than one-third of the women and girls reported missing.

And cases involving Black girls and women, on average, stay open four times longer than other cases. Unfortunately, we don't hear their stories because they don't get told.

The Carlee Russell story isn't going to make people stop believing Black women, and it isn't going to make them stop looking for us.
The simple fact is they already don't believe us, and they already don't look for us.

We should take this opportunity to help increase the publicity missing Black women and girls receive.

We should be amplifying these stories and raising public awareness about the crisis facing our community with regard to missing Black women and girls.
I'm disappointed. I still have many questions. But I'm also glad Carlee is home safe, and I hope she gets whatever help she needs to move past this situation that will likely haunt her for the rest of her life no matter the outcome.

Be disappointed. Have questions. Feel everything you need to feel about this situation, but whatever you do, don't let it stop you from caring.
At the end of the day, a Black woman was missing, and she got the level of attention we wish all missing Black girls and women could receive.

Let's focus on making that the rule and not the exception.
