North Division Dental Renaming Dedication For Longtime North Division HS Donor George Garharz

Representatives of MATC, the MPS board of directors, and private donors joined members of the North Division Alumni committee recently to present a photo of George Garharz that will be placed on the wall of the newly renovated dental lab at the school. Garharz's donation helped renovate the lab after it had been closed for more than 30 years. Since its reopening, North Division students have received free dental exams, dental cleaning, preventative care, fluoride treatments and dental sealants. The late businessman and Social Development Commission official was instrumental in helping launch a newsletter called the "Blue Devil Times;" and many other programs at North Division High School. His financial contributions, along with other sponsors, formed an Advisory Committee and gathered additional sponsorship for producing a quality newsletter for the duration of the three years—Photo by Yvonne Kemp

Is the Biden-Harris administration doing enough to combat anti-Black hate crimes?

In the aftermath of the Jacksonville shooting, community leaders urge more action from the White House while acknowledging the efforts already taken to combat hate.

One week after three Black people were murdered by a self-proclaimed white supremacist at a Dollar General in Jacksonville, Florida, fear of hate crime has risen in the United States, where the issue of race has reached fever-pitch and intensified political divisions.

Yet again, the nation is forced to confront the threat of racial violence in America.

"What we have yet to fully acknowledge and recognize is that white domestic terrorism has always been our biggest threat to this country and the safety of this country," Christina M. Greer, associate professor of political science at Fordham University, told theGrio. "It's always been sort of this poison in our soil, in our air, in our water that we've never, ever wanted to confront."

In the aftermath of the Jacksonville shooting, community leaders and policy experts are urging more action from the Biden-Harris administration while also acknowledging the efforts it has already taken to combat hate and white domestic terrorism.

Days after the Aug. 26 racist attack, President Joe Biden and Vice President Kamala Harris, during a meeting with civil rights leaders, noted that it was one example of an ongoing threat of hate and discrimination.

"We can't let hate prevail," Biden said while seated at a roundtable

Profiles of Milwaukee's NEW History Makers and Pioneers

JOAN JOHNSON

City Librarian Successfully Combines Design and Library Science

By Kathy Gaillard

Joan Johnson is the first African American woman and the fourth woman to be named City Librarian in Milwaukee.

Her route to become City Librarian was circuitous and has come full circle. Growing up, she enjoyed weekly visits to the neighborhood library and has always been an avid reader.

She also spent a lot of time in the library as a student at West Division High School (now Milwaukee School of the Arts), where she was a library monitor.

After graduating from the University of Wisconsin-Madison with a degree in interior design and art, Johnson worked on set designs in Buffalo, New York before returning to Milwaukee to further her career as a designer.

She lived in Chicago for a time, working on the "The Untouchables" film and eventually moved to Seattle.

There, she worked in politics and arts administration, and freelanced as a researcher for other designers, Johnson's research soon led her back to the library working part-time and, at the nudging of her employer, she returned to school to earn a master's degree in library sciences, specializing in bibliographic instruction and government information.

"Being in the library felt like home. I spent a lot of time in libraries researching for the political campaign and for design projects I worked on before taking a part-time position with the Seattle library system.

My supervisor encouraged me to get a degree in Library Science and provided me with a full scholarship to attend the University of Washington where I earned a master's degree in Library Science," said Johnson.

During her 15-year tenure with Seattle's library system, Johnson spent much of her time rebuilding libraries.

"Because of my design knowledge, I was able to work effectively alongside architects, assisting them with Seattle library's rebuilding program. I could never have imagined a career that meshed these two disciplines—library science and interior design—better," said Johnson.

These days Johnson, who labels herself as a ‘people person’ spends a great deal of her time communicating with various library stakeholders, including more than 300 employees, board members, volunteers, patrons, and public officials.

“I started hosting all-staff town hall meetings via Zoom so that staff can have time with me. I need to be available to my employees, as well as constituents. This approach helps streamline the process and has been well received,” said Johnson.

Johnson is hopeful that as long as libraries keep up with changing times—especially technology—they will always be relevant.

“At one point I thought that books might become obsolete, but there’s a physicality with books that you can’t get with audio books and electronic markers can’t replace the ‘dog-eared’ pages of a book.

“The library offers options for everyone. You can peek through our ‘virtual branch,’ download content, including books, streaming video and music, or you can physically hold a book. We also have options for people who have disabilities,” said Johnson.

Johnson is especially proud of some of the many library resources available to teachers and students.

“We have a homework portal called “Brainfuse” where students can access homework help or engage with ‘live’ tutors to get help with papers and essays or have them scored by certified teachers.

“Also, in partnership with AmeriCorps members (called near-peers)—MPL helps young people develop a love of reading, increases information literacy skills, and establishes relationships with youth that bridge the gap bejects that align with their interests.

“Knowledge is power and libraries are extremely important to facilitate that. Any city that has a healthy library system is a city of hope.

“People don’t realize how much we’re doing to support them and helping them realize their full potential,” said Johnson.

We see you and hear you, Joan Johnson. And we thank you for your expertise and vision that ensures the longevity and relevance of libraries. Libraries are diamonds that open the doors to possibilities.

Signifyin' columnist Mikel Holt with South Carolina U.S. Senator Tim Scott at a recent luncheon.

The ‘Old Testament’ politics of GOP presidential candidate, Sen. Tim Scott

In the Republican game of presidential musical chairs, South Carolina Senator Tim Scott is undoubtedly proving to have a rhythmic glide to his stride, even if the African American audience can't relate because the tune being played is not 'Old School R&B.'

And since the candidates are striding to alternating polka and country western music, it is all but assured candidate Donald Trump will eventually flop his big butt in the most prominent chair.

Nonetheless, with Trump's absence necessitated by an appearance for mug shots in Georgia on multiple charges of racketeering, Scott's two-step has come into focus.

In fact, based on the assessment of several reputable African American pundits, Scott, the African American senator from the first state to succeed from the Union in 1861, took second place among debaters during the first Republican square dance in Milwaukee two weeks ago.

Such luminaries as respected journalist and Sirius talk radio host Karen Hunter posited that Scott came in second behind Nikki Haley, the only woman in the hunt for the GOP nomination, and the former South Carolina governor who knighted Scott to his U.S. senatorial seat a decade ago.

Scott went on to officially win the seat in consecutive elections. However, as Democratic Party shepherds of the Black flock pointed out, he didn't receive the majority Black vote, which went to a Black Democratic Party candidate.

That's because Scott is, in my refocused prism of American political scripture, 'Old Testament.'

For those who haven't fully grasped 21st century 'new norm' politics, the distinction between the two major parties can be simplified by explaining Republicans follow Old Testament covenants on gender roles, crime, and the sanctity of 'human life'---which they interpret to mean they are pro-life and anti-abortion---while the Democrats are New Testament, liberal thinkers who essentially posit theBible is an evolving document which changes with societal attitudes, political expediency, and cultural conveniences.

Don't assume I'm blowing smoke or suggesting blasphemous metaphors.

Most Black millennials are unaware that their grandparents were faithful to similar paradigms, including the sanctity of marriage and the 'sins' of homosexuality, fornication, murder, and looking white people in the eye.

Believe it or not, those tenets also applied to Democrats before the party reversed its platform in the mid-1960s and decided, like Thomas Jefferson, that scripture didn't meet their political aspirations and could be rewritten or written out.

That left the GOP as the only hope for maintaining power and embrace conservatism and evangelicals. The party that once championed civil rights restructured its platform to address the issue of nationalism, an unnecessarily 'strong' defense posture (strong military) over social welfare; and opposition to nontraditional family structures and---of course---abortion.

Nonetheless, while Scott has been ostracized by Democrats and many African Americans for his 'political religion' and support of Donald Trump, he has garnered positive accolades for championing an overhaul of education, which only the politically impotent fail to link to Black America's array of social ills.

And it was that 'novel' political advocacy that sparked my curiosity amidst my dwindling hope for systemic change.

As such, I recently reached out to Black conservative Republican Gerard Randall during the MCJ anniversary fete for an opportunity to connect me with Scott following the recent Republican debate.

His response was an invitation to a closed luncheon with a cadre of local movers and shakers of both hues.

Randall also invited former Wisconsin Governor Tommy Thompson, whose support of several Black-inspired initiatives, including investments in economic development and school choice, garnered him the most significant Black voter turnout in state history, arrived shortly after Scott's departure.

If Scott comes close to walking in former Governor Thompson's footsteps, he can fill a notable void in this presidential sweepstakes.

I'll clarify that point later.

Under an open format, it didn't take much for me to dominate the Q&A segment, not only because I was the only journalist in the room, but equally because I assume those with lesser melanin were curious as to what an African American 'independent' known for my Black Nationalistic philosophy, had to say.

What they witnessed was a lively discussion about the plight of Black America---specifically Milwaukee---highlighted by a lengthy discussion about my single focus political issue: education.

As the only presidential candidate of either party to declare educational reform as a platform priority, Scott's campaign has evoked my interest, raising above the cloud of controversy related to his highly publicized comments on American racism.

To my inquiries, Scott boldly suggested the route America must take to resolve the cancer of poverty, joblessness, and racism is through the valley of education.

And unless America selects new leadership to address this national calamity immediately, those social ills will multiply as artificial intelligence (AI) strips millions from the workforce.

A strong supporter of school choice---educational options---Scott said it was not a cure-all and that systemic reforms must be actualized if America is to address poverty and the myriad issues that are a direct byproduct.

Scott said he sees education through the lens of someone limited by his socioeconomic status, including being raised in a single-parent household. As a product of his environment, he failed most core subjects as a freshman.

He explained an intervention by a mentor redirected his path, which unfortunately is not the case for most urban children facing the obstacles of poverty and substandard education.

As he spoke, Scott's mother, who traveled the campaign trail with him, provided several nods of approval at various points.

Since we were seated back-to-back, I couldn't see her face. Still, I assume she had a broad smile, one of pride and the recognition that discipline, provocation, and strong Christian faith can overcome any obstacle, regardless of one's hue.

She may even have felt isolated and betrayed, as the values and mores she raised her son to believe---including the bromide that neither race nor racism should ever be a barrier, or excuse---has become a mantra for cultural attacks.

She also, no doubt, finds fault with the assumption that there is a template for Blackness.

Scott noted that America spends $770 billion on 'public' education, "14% from the feds," although that underwhelming investment has a large imprint that can sway the failing educracy.

A systemic educational overhaul must include a parents' bill of rights, which he supports because parents are excluded from the educational equation under the current system.

Instead, 'it is a teacher or bureaucrat who determines what's best for your children,' a recipe that frequently ends with excuses for failure.

Poor children, which includes a disproportionate percentage of Black students living in impoverished urban America, are two years behind their middle-class counterparts educationally, a status few will overcome under the current template.

That is not to say urban children do not have similar potential or intelligence, but the system and frequently disengaged or apathetic parents, are failing them, he said.

Scott proudly explained his evolution from a 'statistic' to a college graduate, business owner, and senator on the national stage is proof positive of what can be achieved when you don't allow yourself to be swayed by 'poverty politics'---the lie that only the exceptional emerge from the pack.

A strong advocate for school choice---which he noted Democrats oppose because of teacher union influence---has proven to be a successful educational that included Black advocates such as Rev. Al Sharpton, former U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young and children of Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr, Bernice King and Martin Luther King III. “We’re not going to remain silent.”

What has the Biden-Harris administration done to address anti-Black hate crimes?

Melanie Campbell, an activist and organizer who attended the White House meeting last week, told theGrio that civil rights leaders requested the Biden-Harris administration to “build upon” the president’s United We Stand Summit on anti-hate held last year by taking it “on the road,” beginning in Jacksonville.

Campbell, CEO of the National Coalition on Black Civic Participation and convener of the Black Women’s Roundtable, said such a tour around the country is needed as “there is a national trend of increased hate crimes,” in addition to “attacks on our rights and freedoms,” like restrictions on teaching African-

American history and bans on books by Black authors in some states.

LaShawn Warren, chief policy officer at Southern Poverty Law Center, told theGrio that the White House must also “follow on commitments made during the United We Stand Summit.”

Those commitments include: strengthening the government’s coordination and community engagement to prevent, respond to and recover from hate-fueled violence; forming a bipartisan citizens’ initiative to address hate-fueled violence; and mobilizing $1 billion in new investments to increase support for programs that build bridges among Americans of different backgrounds to “foster unity,” among other actions.

As theGrio has learned from its readers, some Black Americans would like to see Biden work with Congress to pass an anti-Black hate crime law similar to the COVID-19 Hate Crimes Act, which was designed to combat rising anti-Asian violence during the pandemic.

Terrance Woodbury, CEO of HIT Strategies, a polling data and research firm focused on voters of color, told theGrio that the topic of an anti-hate crime bill frequently comes up in focus groups.

“Sometimes I hear it as, ‘they got to the AAPI violence bill, but they haven’t done anything for Black people,’” Woodbury said. “Sometimes I hear it as, ‘they’re so focused on LGBTQ or Latinos.’”

Woodbury continued, “That’s the zero-sum politics that’s going to require Democrats to put forth a proactive vision for what they believe race in America should be.”

The pollster, who said combating racism is consistently a top-three issue for Democratic voters, noted that he believes the “zero-sum politics” reflected in public frustration over the anti-Asian violence legislation in the absence of a similar law for Black Americans is a result of “paid communication.”

“In an environment that’s this loud, effective messaging isn’t just what we say, it’s what we pay to make sure that they hear,” Woodbury told theGrio.

Despite the administration completing or initiating 88% of the top ten policy items Black voters say they wanted to see to address white supremacy, Woodbury acknowledged it’s not cutting through the noise of “misinformation.”

For example, Woodbury noted that the U.S. Department of Justice under the Biden-Harris administration has used already existing hate-crime legislation to “prosecute and, most importantly, secure convictions.” He added, “They’re getting it done, and voters don’t know it.”

Some of those prosecutions include the current and former Louisville Metro Police Department officers involved in the death of Breonna Taylor, the three white men involved in the murder of Ahmaud Arbery in Georgia and the white supremacist who gunned down nine Black shoppers at a grocery store in Buffalo, New York.

According to data provided to theGrio, since January 2021, when Biden took office, the Justice Department charged more than 95 defendants in over 85 cases for committing bias-motivated crimes. In that same time frame, the DOJ obtained convictions against more than 80 defendants for committing hate crimes.

Warren said the Emmett Till Antilynching Act, signed by Biden in March 2022, also “helps provide more federal involvement with cases.”

“The Department of Justice’s lean forward approach to enforcing federal hate crime laws and improving hate crime data are laudable efforts,” Warren said. “The administration also knows the problem includes easy access to guns and has worked to close the loopholes.”

Hate and violence fueled by the Republican Party

Warren lamented that obstacles remain due to inaction and, in some cases, outright resistance that bigoted ideas have been mainstreamed and normalized once again,” Warren added.

“It’s hard to have a national conversation when you have one political party that is essentially telling white domestic terrorists that it’s their country and they have to take it back,” Greer said. She said Republican politicians are also “making it easier for them to have all different types of guns that can destroy people, communities, and towns in milliseconds.”

When it comes to addressing white domestic terrorism and hate crimes, Greer said, “It can’t just be Joe Biden.”

“It would be great if we could pressure more people from both parties to really speak out about this,” she shared. “It’s a great start with the president, but I really need Democratic senators and members of the House to keep this in the forefront and really pressure their colleagues to be on record.”

She added, “Because Republicans now can get away without even offering thoughts and prayers.”

option, particularly for the millions in failing public schools.

Milwaukee is a shining example of what can be achieved by empowering parents and opening the doors to successful lives.

"The fact is 20% of the nation's best schools are charters, outperforming public schools," he explained.

A more significant percentage of 'choice students' have access to Black male teachers, which data reveals enhances student performance by leaps and bounds.

"Seventy percent of Americans support school choice, so we should (provide) parents with those options."

Echoing statements he's made in interviews throughout the campaign, he said, "Every parent should have a choice."

In response to my revelation about Milwaukee's status as the worst city in the county for African Americans—highest Black incarceration, poverty, male unemployment, and educational achievement rates---Scott said each negative social stats can be traced to poor education.

Among his top priorities, if elected, would be to create an educational template that will equalize the playing field and provide children with the tools to succeed based on their ability and not the color of their skin.

But that educational paradigm will be changed only when the discussion is about what is best for the children instead of what is best for the adults---particularly teachers' union opposition to systemic reforms.

As I later watched the attendees line up to take photos with the man with a target on his back, I couldn't help but remember the opening intro of talk show host Ken Harris, which questions why Black folks put all of their eggs in one political basket and then complain when we have no voice at the dinner table.

I don't know if Tim Scott will be the nominee, as most pundits feel unless there is an alien invasion or criminal conviction, Trump will again face Biden next year.

Even if Trump becomes an ineligible felon, Scott will face Black criticism for his Old Testament philosophy and, more distinctly, his conservative lyrics, including his much-publicized comment that America is not a racist country.

Maybe because I'm politically independent and view both parties as wings on the same bird, I took that statement with a grain of 'political sea salt.'

Moreover, I cannot ignore that while Democrats and members of the 'Negrocracy' call Scott something other than brother precisely because of his opinion, they were silent when Vice President Kamala Harris made a similar statement.

Nor have I heard a Democrat offer a solution to one of the root causes of Black underachievement in America—education. Instead, the party conveniently offers band-aids and wishful thinking as millions of Black Americans slip through the education cracks.

Since, from my vantage point, my vision is often obscured by Black misery, disenchantment, and the 'de-evolution' of our tribe, I've become so desperate for intervention that I simply don't care whose hand is throwing us a life preserver.

I've long ago surmised our renaissance will not occur as long as we await a political knight or engage in 'missionary politics.'

Moreover, as my mentor Polly Williams once declared, we have no permanent friends or permanent enemies, only permanent issues.

Scott's positions on the issues of immigration, systemic racism, the economy, and social welfare may not be in tune with the Black agenda (whatever it is today... wait, what time is it now?). Still, he is the only candidate speaking Ebonics on the civil rights battleground of education.

Black female attorneys pay a hefty price when holding Trump accountable!

"I have seen an unprecedented attack on Black women...for doing their jobs," Cook County State's Attorney Kimberly Foxx told theGrio.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS — FEBRUARY 22: Joined by Chicago Police Superintendent Eddie Johnson, Cook County State's Attorney Kim Foxx announces that charges have been filed against singer R. Kelly on February 22, 2019 in Chicago, Illinois. Kelly has been charged with 10 counts of aggravated sexual abuse of four victims, at least three between the ages of 13 and 17. In recent months, Black female attorneys have carried a heavy burden of attempting to hold former President Donald Trump accountable for his alleged criminal conduct.

Most recently, Fani Willis, district attorney of Fulton County, rolled out an indictment against Trump and 18 co-defendants for their attempt to overturn the 2020 presidential election.

In recent weeks, Willis faced criticism from Trump supporters and Republican politicians, who have called for the Fulton County prosecutor to face impeachment or to defund her office for bringing charges against the former Republican president.

In a recent interview with theGrio, Kimberly Foxx, the state's attorney for Cook County in Illinois, said, "I have seen an unprecedented attack on Black women...for doing their jobs."

"The racialized, sexualized threats against Black women have been unrelenting, and I want to be able to say that these were isolated incidents," said Foxx, who faced scrutiny from conservatives for her role in the criminal case against actor Jussie Smollett.

The case became politicized after Smollett, who claimed to have been attacked by men wearing "MAGA" hats, was accused of orchestrating a hoax. Foxx, the initial lead prosecutor who declined to charge Smollett, recalled to theGrio someone threatening to "hang her from a tree" and another who wanted to "rattle my brain with bullets." Foxx told theGrio she is not seeking reelection as Cook County state's attorney.

Foxx sees a pattern of threats being lodged against Black female prosecutors who happen to be on the opposing side of Donald Trump.

"The fact of the matter is Fani Willis has the former president of the United States reposting threats on his social media," she said. "

It has felt like for the last seven years that Black women have been out here leading the fight for a criminal justice system that's fair and just."

However, Foxx noted, "Since coming into office in 2016...I have seen methodically an unrelenting pursuit of these women in office that [is] causing them to leave. Some on their own terms and sometimes not on their own terms."

Foxx mentioned Monique Worrell, former Florida state's attorney, who was also targeted for her criminal justice reform record.

Last month, she was suspended by Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis.

The Republican presidential candidate accused her of putting forth "practices and policies" that "allowed violent criminals to escape the full consequences of their criminal conduct, thereby endangering the innocent civilians of Orange and Osceola counties."

In 2022, New York Attorney General Letitia "Tish" James also faced backlash for filing a lawsuit against Trump and his business for fraudulent activities that allegedly took place for more than a decade.

James accused him of inflating the value of his assets in an attempt to defraud bank lenders and insurers.

James also filed the lawsuit to preclude the former president or any of his three adult children from serving as executives for any New York company in the future.

Trump did not take too kindly to the lawsuit and accused James of being a "racist" and that she was engaging in a "witch hunt."

Another Black woman in the criminal justice system tasked with holding Trump to account is Judge Tanya Chutkan.

Similar to Foxx, Willis, and James, the federal district court judge received threats on her life, including from a Texas woman who was charged for saying, "We want to kill you."

Foxx told theGrio that people

Fulton Cnty D.A. Fani Willis

NY Atty. General James

Fed. Judge Tanya Chutkan

are too "passive" in their response as it pertains to the criticisms Black prosecutors and lawyers face in the current political climate that Trump continues to dominate.

"People have to get as enraged as the people who are targeted... we have prosecutors who are out here who are trying to enforce the law.

"Who are actively, openly, and notoriously threatened in front of all of our eyes. That should outrage us," she said.

Foxx added, "We should demand more, and we should hold people accountable, including the former president of the United States, when he engages in that type of behavior."

Body of Tuskegee airman positively identified after eight decades

Second Lt. Fred L. Brewer Jr. went missing on Oct. 19, 1944, while on a bomber escort mission with 56 other fighters over enemy targets in Regensburg, Germany Defense Department officials have identified the remains of a Tuskegee pilot who went missing during World War II 79 years ago, ABC News reports.

According to the Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency (DPPA), Second Lt. Fred L. Brewer Jr. went missing on Oct. 19, 1944, while on a bomber escort mission with 56 other fighters over enemy targets in Regensburg, Germany.

The North Carolina native flew a single-seat P-51C Mustang nicknamed "Traveling Light" out of Ramitelli Air Field in Italy when heavy cloud cover forced several fighters to return to the base early.

Brewer was not among the 47 fighters who returned to base, according to the Defense POW/MIA Accounting Agency.

"Reports from other pilots on the mission indicate that 2nd Lt. Brewer had been attempting to climb his aircraft out of the cloud cover but stalled out and fell into a spin," the agency said.

There was no evidence that Brewer ejected from the plane. According to the agency, local news reported him missing at the time and eventually declared him dead.

U.S. personnel recovered a body from a civilian cemetery in the area after the war, but it was impossible to identify the remains using the technology at the time. The body was buried as an unknown.

Research conducted on the case in 2011 revealed the remains were recovered from a crashed fighter plane the same day that Brewer disappeared. German wartime records confirmed this information, according to the agency.

The remains were sent to a DPAALaboratory in June 2022 for further analysis.

Based on the combined evidence, the remains were identified as those of 2LT Brewer last month.

Brewer joined the U.S. Army Air Forces in November 1943 and graduated from Tuskegee Army Air Field in Alabama in 1944, ABC News reports. He was a Tuskegee Airman and a member of the 100th Fighter Squadron, 332nd Fighter Group.

The Tuskegee Airmen flew combat missions during World War II as the country's first African American military aviators. Tuskegee University is estimated to have trained about 1,000 Black pilots.

Brewer's name appears at the Florence American Cemetery in Impruneta, Italy, on the Tablets of the Missing, according to ABC News.

His cousin, Robena Brewer Harrison, told The Washington Post they hope to bury his remains in Charlotte.

"I remember how devastating it was when they notified my family, my aunt and uncle, that he was missing," Harrison told The Washington Post.

"It just left a void within our family. My aunt, who was his mother, Janie, she never, ever recovered from that."—thegrio.com

OPINION

COACH PRIME

Deion Sanders dismantles college sports’ hypocrisy while leading Colorado out of the dark!

In his New York Times bestseller, “The Cruelty is the Point,” Adam Serwer makes the case that President Trump and his supporters find community in the suffering of those they hate and fear.

Replacing a few words in that assertion explains the disruptions roiling major college sports.

The shifts have been seismic and unmistakable, flipping players and conferences from coast to coast.

As usual, explanations from the industry’s double-dealing power-brokers are filled with half-truths and whole lies.

But Colorado football coach Deion Sanders knows the game inside and out, on and off the field. He’s calling them on their B.S. and putting it in their faces.

The Pac-12 is a dead conference walking, soon to be the Pac-0 despite roots dating to 1915. Power 5 survivors will fatten up on the carcass, with the Big 12 swallowing Colorado, Arizona, Arizona State and Utah; the Big 10 biting off USC, UCLA, Oregon and Washington; and the ACC loosening its belt to digest Stanford, Cal and SMU. Simultaneously, the old guard is bemoaning athletes’ recently gained ability to easily change schools and make money off themselves.

What? How can coaches, athletic directors, conference commissioners and NCAA officials be so adamantly opposed to athletes’ rights?

“All this is about money, you know that,” Sanders said in response to criticism four weeks ago, before he shocked the establishment by upsetting heavily favored TCU.

“It’s about a bag, everybody’s chasing the bag. Then you get mad at the players when they chase it. How is that? How do the grownups get mad at the players when they chase it, when the colleges are chasing it?”

The hypocrisy is the point. The NCAA and its supporters find community in gaslighting athletes they (perhaps subconsciously) hate and fear.
