month – because it's gone past its expiration date*.

The national average was $907, meaning Wisconsinites are among the most wasteful in the nation.

Broken down by state, the survey found that South

Carolinians are the most wasteful, who get rid of $1,304.68 worth of food every year.

The least-wasteful state is West Virginia, who's residents only throw away $404.90 worth of their annual groceries.

So why are we being so wasteful?

It seems that the misunderstanding of food labelling might be a huge factor.

The survey found that nearly half of respondents (48.9%) won't eat food that's marked as past its sell-by date – but perhaps that's because they are misinformed about what the sell-by date actually means – it is the last date by which it must be sold in a

- Only 1/4 of people know what the use-by date means.
- South Carolinians are the most wasteful in the nation.
- West Virginians are the least wasteful.

Or are we guilty of food waste?

Cherry Digital, a communications agency, wanted to find out just how wasteful we Americans are, and surveyed 3,200 of us to find out how much we throw away this past year...

The first discovery was that Wisconsin households waste $1,159 worth of food annually, or in other words, almost a third (29%) of their food each Winter tends to be a very foodie time of year; we've had Thanksgiving and Christmas, with all the turkey excesses.

All across the nation, families have filled up the freezer, stocked up the fridges, and got supplies for each food-focused gathering.

But what happens to everything we buy?

Are we as good as we could be about using everything up?

WNED PBS TO AIR DOCUMENTARY ON EARLY CIVIL RIGHTS MOVEMENT

The Niagara Movement: The Early Battle for Civil Rights premieres Monday, Nov. 6

BUFFALO, N.Y. — The Niagara Movement: The Early Battle for Civil Rights, a powerful hour-long documentary by WNED PBS, delves deep into a national crusade that forged the civil rights landscape for the 20th century and beyond.

The film explores the Black elite and intellectual society at the turn of the 20th century and examines the heated national debate and conflict three Black leaders — sociologist W.E.B Du Bois, publisher William Monroe Trotter and educator and orator Booker T. Washington — had about how best to foster equality and opportunity for Black Americans. The film premieres on Monday, November 6, at 9 p.m. on WNED PBS and Buffalo Toronto Public Media's YouTube Channel.

The film, produced and directed by Emmy Award-winning and two-time Oscar-nominated filmmaker Lawrence R. Hott, spotlights the early battle behind the civil rights movement that sprang forth as a repudiation of the methods of Booker T. Washington, then the most prominent Black leader in America.

The end of Reconstruction brought about oppressive Jim Crow laws and widespread lynching. Washington pandered to white society with his conciliatory philosophy of racial segregation and industrial training for Blacks instead of other advances.

Washington's position was roundly criticized by Du Bois and by Trotter, a prominent Boston newspaper publisher, and soon a new civil rights organization emerged: the Niagara Movement.

The group was formed when Du Bois and Trotter helped summon Black intellectuals, clergy, writers, newspapermen and activists from across the country to Buffalo, New York; the 29 store; however, after that, it's still good to eat (even if it's past what's marked as the use-by date).

Wisconsin households waste over $1,150 worth of food each year, reveals study!

Again, the label – use-by date – caused confusion: only one-quarter knew that it signifies the last date for use of the product at its peak quality.

Nearly a third (30.4%) believed that it was the last date the product was edible, almost a quarter (22%) thought it meant that it was the last date the food product could be displayed and sold in a store, and finally, 21% thought it meant the date that the product would be at its best flavor and quality - when, in fact, this is the 'best-by' date (interestingly, while these guides are in place, they don't actually say that this is the last date a product can be eaten by - that part is up to you, the consumer.

You can eat something beyond the guidelines, but just give it a check over, or a 'sniff test' first before eating).

Over half (51.1%) of people believe that best before dates on fruits and vegetables should be scrapped altogether because they say it's easy to tell if something has gone off just by touching it.

The survey also found that the foods Americans would be most likely throw away are dairy products (46.6%); followed by meat (22.3%); fish (19.2%); bread (5.1%) and vegetables (8.5%).

Cherry Digital have provided advice below on how you can be more resourceful with your food, and so hopefully will be able to throw less away in the future:

Freeze your food. You can actually freeze the food right up till the use-by date, and it will be good to eat months later! (Just double check what you can or can't freeze - not everything can go in, like soft cheeses).

Freeze milk into an ice cube tray! As the survey revealed, most people will throw away dairy products first - well now they can use this handy tip instead of wasting. Use the frozen milk cubes in coffee or tea!

Put your herbs into a glass of water to prevent them from wilting quickly, they will last much longer!

If yogurts are getting near their use-by date, you can mix them up with some over-ripe fruit for a smoothie or even freeze into ice-lollies!

Turn stale bread or crusts into breadcrumbs by putting them in a food processor. Fantastic when mixed with herbs or onions as a stuffing for chicken or to top baked fish!

When cooking with foods such as potatoes, broccoli, or carrots, use it all.

You don't need to remove the peel or cut the stems off, as they often have additional nutrients in!

And if you don't like the peel or stem, you can compost what you don't use.

Donate the items you might be close to throwing out which aren't yet out of date.

There will be plenty of food kitchens nearby that would really appreciate anything you have which is going spare.

men ultimately met across the Niagara River in Fort Erie, Canada, to evade disruption by Washington's supporters. The organization's key demand: full civil rights for Black Americans.

Its Declaration of Principles, a sharp rebuke to Washington, stated, in part: "We refuse to allow the impression to remain that the Negro-American assents to inferiority, is submissive under oppression, and apologetic before insults."

The film captures the far-reaching impact of the short-lived Movement — disbanded only four years after its inception — which laid the cornerstone of the modern American civil rights movement, eventually morphing into the NAACP.

"The influence of the Niagara Movement is evident in the protests and court challenges of the American civil rights movement as well as past and current activism," said Tom Calderone, President & CEO of Buffalo Toronto Public Media.

"We are pleased to present this important film about such a prevailing influence on our society."

The Niagara Movement will be distributed by American Public Television in February 2024 to public television stations across the country (check local listings). The film will be available on the PBS app in February 2024.

THANK YOU REP. GWEN MOORE FOR BEING A HERO FOR HEALTHY KIDS AND COMMUNITIES.

For decades, the tobacco industry has targeted Black communities and kids with menthol cigarettes, profiting while cigarettes kill 45,000 Black Americans each year. Menthols are more addictive and easier for kids to start smoking. Your support to eliminate menthol cigarettes will protect kids, advance health equity and save lives.
