St. Matthew CME kids get ready for the holiday season

The children and youth of the St. Matthew Christian Methodist Episcopal Church are shown preparing for three upcoming events for the Christmas season. The children will perform a skit titled, "A Night In Bethlehem," on Sunday, December 10, during the 8:30 a.m. morning worship hour. This presentation will include music by the children, acting by youth and will be a reminder to all of the true meaning of Christmas. On Saturday, December 16, St. Matthew's children and youth will visit area nursing homes to bring Christmas joy through music and scripture recitations. Finally, on Sunday, December 31, the children and youth will end the year by singing during morning worship. St. Matthew is located at 7500 N. 76 Street. Rev. Dr. Richard D. Shaw is pastor.—Photos provided by St. Matthew CME Church

PACKERS' AARON JONES AND HIS BROTHER ALVIN JONES, JR. DONATED 150 FOR THANKSGIVING

GREEN BAY— Green Bay Packers star running back Aaron Jones, his twin brother Alvin Jones, Jr. and their A&A All The Way Foundation held their annual Thanksgiving Turkey Drive in Green Bay on Nov. 21.

"The Turkey Drive is a great way to give back to families in the community," said Aaron Jones.

"We are so fortunate that we can play a part in helping families celebrate the holidays."

The turkey drive took place at Paul's Pantry in Green Bay. The Jones brothers donated 75 turkeys and 75 hams to families in the Green Bay area to help spread holiday joy to 150 different families.

This is the third year that the A&A All The Way Foundation has hosted their annual Turkey Drive in both Wisconsin and El Paso, their hometown.

The aunties, uncles and cousins' guide to a drama-free holiday!

Gather around! Here are theGrio's tips for shade-free, clap-back-free gatherings with your family this holiday season. The aunties, uncles and cousins' guide to a drama-free holiday!

By Haniyah Philogene-Article courtesy of thegrio.com

All right, aunties, uncles and cousins — gather around!

Thanksgiving is upon us, and we all know what that means: a table full of turkey, mac and cheese and the potential for some awkward encounters.

Whether it's backhanded comments or borderline homophobic conversation, we all have that one family member (or a few) who just can't hold their tongue.

While we all know and love the Thanksgiving clapback tales online, the comedic essence of these moments does not always translate into real life and can unlock a Pandora's box of drama at your dinner table.

To make sure your Turkey Day is as smooth as Grandma's gravy, we've created a guide for the not-so-woke dinner guests who are prone to a slip of the tongue.

Let's dive in and learn how to keep it real and respectful at the dinner table.

R-e-s-p-e-c-t

Respect is the name of the game, folks. Just as young people should respect their elders, the old heads should respect the youngins. It is a two-way street.

Just because you remember changing a person's diaper does not give you a pass to speak to them in any kind of way.

Also, someone setting a boundary or expressing what they did not appreciate does not make them rude or disrespectful.

Pronoun proficiency

It's 2023, and nowadays, people go by a number of pronouns. I know that may be confusing since "back in your day," everyone was just he or she, but if someone introduces themselves and says something along the lines of "my pronouns are..." do your best to respect and honor that.

Think of it like remembering everyone's name — a small effort with a big impact.

The difference between being curious and nosey

Offentimes, the holidays are a reunion amongst people you have not seen in a long time.

This means a lot may have changed since the last time you saw them.

So, when navigating conversations, take note of the things people are not bringing up or talking about.

For instance, if they haven't brought the significant other that they wouldn't stop talking about last year, don't call them out in the middle of dinner about it.

Humor is not a cushion

While comedic relief is always appreciated, don't try to use "it's a joke" to avoid taking accountability for an offensive statement. In that same vein, remember jokes are for laughs, not attacks.

When things get political

Although everyone knows to avoid talking about money and politics in social settings, given the current state of affairs, there is a higher chance that these things will come up.

If political discourse heats up faster than the turkey in the oven, practice active listening, seek to understand and allow others to share their perspectives (no matter how much you may disagree).

Should things get too heated, try a light-hearted segue like: "Speaking of politics, did anyone catch that [insert popular non-controversial TV show or movie] lately?"

It's been the talk of the town! This shift allows everyone to exhale the political tension and engage in a conversation that unites rather than divides.

You don't need to say every thought

Whether you're criticizing the mac and cheese or someone's outfit choice, that lil snarky comment you think you made under your breath should stay in your head. At the very least, save the comments for when you do a debrief with your favorite auntie, cousin, bestie, etc.

WHO declares loneliness a ‘pressing health threat.’ Two Black women have been enlisted to help!

Ahead of another holiday season, the World Health Organization is launching a diverse commission to combat loneliness and spread awareness.

By Kay Wicker, article courtesy of the grio.com

Although there are roughly 8 billion people on the planet, the World Health Organization (WHO) estimates that 25% of older people across all regions of the globe experience “social isolation,” and that feeling increases the risk of chronic illnesses and risky behavior, according to the body responsible for international public health.

The effect of loneliness on health drove the WHO last week to announce its plans to launch a commission with a diverse set of health leaders to combat social isolation.

According to a release, during the next three years, the Commission on Social Connection will address “loneliness as a pressing health threat, promote social connection as a priority, and accelerate the scaling up of solutions in countries of all incomes.” The new commission will study how loneliness and social isolation can impact physical, mental, and emotional health.

The announcement arrives at a time when roughly 44 million American adults are experiencing significant loneliness, which can lead to premature death, anxiety and cardiovascular disease, wrote U.S. Surgeon General Vivek H. Murthy, who co-chairs the WHO commission. Social isolation, he wrote, can cause as much harm to a person as smoking 15 cigarettes a day. The initiative also arrives as many around the world are preparing for a busy holiday season. While many have family and friends to spend the upcoming celebrations with, loneliness, social isolation and depression can surge during the latter months of the year.

In addition to Murthy, the commission, which includes a diverse set of international policy-makers, thought leaders and advocates, will be chaired by African Union Youth Envoy Chido Mpemba, who is bringing awareness to how loneliness disproportionately impacts young adults and youths.

“Young people are not immune to loneliness. Social isolation can affect anyone, of any age, anywhere,” Mpemba said in the release. “Across Africa and beyond, we must redefine the narrative around loneliness. Investments in social connection are critical to creating productive, resilient, and stable economies that promote the well-being of current and future generations.”

Among the other commissioners is American disability rights advocate and the first deafblind graduate of Harvard Law School, Haben Girma.

“As someone who struggled with isolation, as ‘a Deafblind person in a world designed mostly for sighted, hearing people, as a guide dog partner facing public rejection on a regular basis, becoming a Commissioner of the World Health Organization’s new Commission on Social Connection is a tremendous honor,” Girma wrote in the caption of an Instagram post announcing the commission.

She added, “I’m excited to serve, amplifying the issues [and] innovative solutions within the disability community.”

LET'S EAT! ARE YOU 'HIGH ON THE HOG'? UNPACKING OUR HISTORY WITH PORK!

African Americans have a complicated relationship with 'the other white meat' but enjoy it more than any other demographic—including this foolproof pork shoulder recipe.

By Ray Marcano, courtesy of thegrio.com

There's a famous line in the movie Pulp Fiction in which Jules, played by Samuel L. Jackson, calmly tells Vincent, played by John Travolta:

"I just don't dig on swine."

It's always been one of my favorite exchanges in the film, not just because of the relaxed and hysterical way Travolta and Jackson play it, but because it deftly navigates how some Black people feel about eating pork.

"Pigs are filthy animals," Jules goes on to say. "I don't eat filthy animals."

That's not a descriptor—"filthy animals"—that has a whole lot of appeal to folks. But do I like pork? Hell to the yes. I love the smell of bacon crackling in a cast iron skillet, or a thick-cut pork chop on the smoker, or ribs on the grill.

I like the taste even better.

I'm not alone. Black people eat an average of 63 pounds of pork per year per person, more than any other racial demographic, according to the USDA.

That's about 80 half-slabs of ribs, 252 quarter-pound pulled pork sandwiches, and roughly eight whole pork butts.

But on the other hand, some Black people, like Jules (fictional as he may be) won't eat pork, citing history and religion.

Historically, the term "pig" has been used to denote an unclean person content to wallow in their filth, a characterization that stretches back to Biblical times.

"And the pig, though it has a split hoof completely divided, does not chew the cud; it is unclean for you. You must not eat their meat or touch their carcasses; they are unclean for you," according to Leviticus 11: 7-9.

The explorer Hernando de Soto brought pigs to America in 1539, and they quickly became a source of sustenance.

But pigs couldn't outrun their reputation. The phrase "happy as a pig in slop" may have originated in England in the 1870s.

The English meant the phrase as, "look how happy he is," but here, the phrase has continually carried a nasty connotation since pigs wallow in their own muck.

Nevertheless, pork was the main source of meat for white Southerners and the people they enslaved, according to the online resource U.S. History Scene.

The enslaved received less desirable cuts of pork and relied on their cooking skills to create edible dishes. As noted by the Pittsburgh-Post Gazette, those bad cuts became some of the staples of soul food meals we still eat today, like chitterlings, and pigs' feet and tails.

But starting around the 1960s, pork began to lose its luster among Black people.

In her essay, In Praise of Pork, Natalie Moore deftly traces the history of the anti-pork movement to the Black

Taking steps to keep Milwaukee safe.

AARP advocates for pedestrian safety in our neighborhoods.

AARP Milwaukee champions pedestrian safety in our city. After witnessing an accident near a walking event in Amani, neighborhood leaders and AARP jumped into action to direct a speed study, which resulted in the installation of a traffic-calming circle. We then supported Milwaukee's "Safer Streets for All" grant, which helped award millions in funding for future safety improvements. Wherever you're going, AARP Milwaukee is helping you get there safely.

UNPACKING OUR HISTORY WITH PORK!

Power days.

Brothers and sisters sought to remove the modern-day shackles of racism and inequality that kept them down.

They started shedding anything connected to the earlier days of bondage, like white Christian names—and eating pork.

The Hon. Elijah Muhammad of the Nation of Islam weighed in, calling pigs “the foulest animal. He lives off nothing but filth.” Then, when a group of protesters called police “pigs” during the 1968 Democratic Convention, the pejorative term for cops stuck.

Fast forward to today, and there’s an entirely different outlook on the “other white meat.”

Pork is the most consumed meat in the world, according to the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization. In the United States, pork is the third most consumed meat, behind chicken and beef. Several studies note lean pork is rich in protein and iron as well as a good source of vitamins and minerals.

Note: “lean pork.” Too much fat in the diet can lead to obesity, high cholesterol, and risk of heart disease, so we always want to cut back on that.

But that leads to a challenge since fat adds flavor—and I love a good, fatty pork shoulder. So for those pork lovers like me, I’ve come up with a full-proof way to make the shoulder I love while cutting—not eliminating—the fat.

It’s a long, slow process that’s easy but requires patience. While I prefer to smoke the shoulder, this is an oven method that’s easier to execute. Here’s what you need:

Cook time: 8.5 hours

One 7-9 pound pork shoulder

3 tablespoons yellow mustard

3 honey

3 tablespoons rub (store-bought is fine)

Aluminum foil

Paper towels

The Weekend Edition • November 24, 2023 • Page 7

Parchment paper (optional)

Preheat the oven to 300 degrees.

Cover the bottom of a pan with aluminum foil, enough so that it hangs off the edges of the pan. Add in the pork, fat side down. Stir together the mustard, honey, and rub, liberally apply to the top and sides of the shoulder, using all of the mixture.

Completely cover the pork in aluminum foil and bake for three hours. At three hours, uncover, and bake for another three hours. At the end of six hours, turn off the oven, re-cover, at let sit for two more hours.

Take out a large cutting board of another pan and line it with parchment paper and paper towels. At the end of eight hours, gently remove the shoulder from the pan and place it on the board or in the pan. Be careful because the shoulder will still be hot there and will be a lot of grease and juices.

Using paper towels, pat the shoulder dry. Gently turn the shoulder over and expect that it will start falling apart. Remove the bottom layer of fat and discard.

Using two forks, begin shredding the pork and removing spots of fat as you go (if you want).

Once shredded, you can eat the pork as is or add your favorite barbecue sauce.

Enjoy!
