Recently at the Fiserv Forum the Milwaukee Bucks beat the New York Nicks 146 to 122 before a sold out crowd. The win advanced the Bucks to the in-season tournament semi-finals in Las Vegas to play the Indiana Pacers. The Bucks lost the game 126 to 119.

The Bucks out scored the Nicks in every quarter. Giannis Antetokounmpo finished with 35 points, eight Rebounds, 10 assists. Damian Lillard finished with 28 points, three rebounds, seven assists.

The Knicks' Julius Randle scored 41 points, six rebounds, and five assists. Randle plays like the great Knicks legend Willis Reed, who lead the Knicks to a NBA championship in 1973. Walt Frazier, another Knicks legend for the Knicks also was on that championship team and is a commentator and analyst for Knicks broadcasts.

Lenny Kravitz is opening up in the winter issue of Esquire about the lack of flowers he's received from Black media despite his success in music.

Described as a rock, neo-psychedelia, and progressive soul artist, Kravitz has been highly celebrated for his fusion of rock, funk, and R&B. But despite setting the record for most consecutive Grammy wins in one category by a male performer, Kravitz wonders why he's rarely been recognized in Black spaces.

He found mainstream success in the early 90s with his first Top 40 album, Mama Said, which featured the hit single, "It Ain't Over 'til It's Over." But Kravitz says it still took nearly a decade into his career for Vibe magazine to honor him with a cover.

His absence in Black media and award shows led him to question why his success wasn't "celebrated by the folks who run those publications or organizations."

Born May 26, 1964, as the only child of NBC television news producer Sy Kravitz and actress Roxie

Russian-Jewish origin from his late father. Kravitz has been open about the racism he and his parents experienced growing up in a mixed-race household.

Yet, he imagined his success in music would be embraced by the Black community like his predeceswould shun the "Fly Away" singer. "There was this one article that, at that time, said, 'If Lenny Kravitz were white, he would be the next savior of rock 'n' roll,'" he shared. "I got a lot of negativity thrown at me by all these older white men who weren't going to let me have that position."

To date, Kravitz has won many awards, including four straight Grammy awards for Best Male Rock Vocal Performance from 1999 to 2002, and American Music Awards and MTV Video Music Awards.

He has a single nomination from the BET Soul Train Awards (2018, for the Soul Train Certified award) and has been nominated for his film roles, People reports. He also won an NAACP Image Award for outstanding supporting actor in a motion-picture in 2010 and 2013 for Precious and The Hunger Games along with two Black Reel Awards—best supporting actor for Precious in 2010 and outstanding song for The Butler's You and I Ain't No More in 2014.

His genre-bending style of music was ahead of its time but can now be seen regularly through artists like Andre 3000, Childish Gambino, Tyler The Creator, and Pharrell Williams. Kravitz will release his 12th studio album, Blue Electric Light, in March 2024 which will perhaps garner him some nominations at Black award shows.

Roker (The Jeffersons), Kravitz's biracial background consists of African-American and Bahamian descent from his late mother and sors who inspired him. "I have been that dream and example of what a Black artist can do," Kravitz said.

It wasn't just the Black media who Texas high school Black student suspended over hair likely won't return to his class anytime soon!

Darryl George, 18, returned to his in-school suspension at Barbers Hill High School in Mont Belvieu, Texas, last week and will remain there for now.

HOUSTON— A Texas high school Black student who has been disciplined and kept away from his classroom for months for refusing to change his hairstyle is not likely to be back with his regular classmates anytime soon.

Efforts by Darryl George's attorney to ask a judge to pause his punishment by his Houston-area school district over his locs as well as a civil rights lawsuit he and his family filed in September remain on hold in federal court.

George, 18, returned to in-school suspension at his campus, Barbers Hill High School in Mont Belvieu, Texas, last week and for now he will remain there. Before that, he had spent a month at an off-site disciplinary program.

Here are some things to know regarding why George's discipline over his hairstyle has continued for months, why his school district believes its actions have been justified and how various legal issues are complicating George's situation.

WHY DOES DARRYL GEORGE CONTINUE TO BE DISCIPLINED AND UNABLE TO RETURN TO CLASS?

George was first pulled from his classroom in August after school officials said his locs fell below his eyebrows and ear lobes and violated the district's dress code. His family argues his hairstyle does not break any rules.

Allie Booker, the attorney for George's family, said after a hearing Wednesday on the federal lawsuit, that people have been trying to tell George he should give up and cut his hair.

"But he's not going to break. He's strong ... He's like, 'I'm not going to cut my hair, but I just can't believe I'm going through this,'" Booker said. But Booker added she fears George could ultimately be expelled.

WHAT IS THE CROWN ACT AND WHY DOES THE SCHOOL DISTRICT BELIEVE IT'S NOT VIOLATING IT?

George's family has argued his punishment is discriminatory and violates the CROWN Act, which became law in Texas in September and is intended to prohibit race-based hair discrimination and bars employers and schools from penalizing people because of hair texture or protective hairstyles including Afros, braids, dreadlocks, twists or Bantu knots.

In court filings, attorneys for the Barbers Hill School District have said students don't have a protected right under federal law to wear their hair at the length and style of their choice while attending school.

During Wednesday's court hearing, Jonathan Brush, one of the school district's attorneys, said Barbers Hill has for decades had a hair restriction policy for male students related to length.

"Locs have always been permitted," Brush said.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF BLACK SANTA

The Black Santa Houston discusses why representation matters, especially during the holiday season. By Kay Wicker Back in 2017, a little boy in Texas wanted to have his picture taken with Santa. However, the little boy's mother, Magan Butler-Coleman, wanted the Santa in question to look like her son.

She needed a Black Santa. The search took almost two years, but eventually, a mutual friend introduced Butler-Coleman to Kelvin Douglas, an educator in the state and a perfect candidate to don the big red suit and play the part.

However, the little boy's mother, Magan Butler-Coleman, wanted the Santa in question to look like her son.

She needed a Black Santa. The search took almost two years, but eventually, a mutual friend introduced Butler-Coleman to Kelvin Douglas, an educator in the state and a perfect candidate to don the big red suit and play the part.

Douglas agreed — and the whole experience went off without a hitch for the delighted youngster.

It was such a hit that Butler-Coleman was inspired to do more, and, as Douglas recently told theGrio, "Next thing you know, it became a business."

"We were all surprised by the level of interest," Butler-Coleman noted. "I knew we had something."

Since the Black Santa Houston launched in 2019, Douglas has gone on to re-create that experience for countless Black children throughout the country.

From being featured in The New York Times to appearing on the Drew Barrymore Show, he's covered a lot of ground.

"It's a lot of love and pride that I get out of being able to be that reflection for so many kids and families," said Douglas — and he's not alone.

Gone are the days of Santa Claus only being depicted and performed as an old white man with a big belly; Black Santas can now be found at aspirational destinations like Disney World and beyond. Santa also isn't just Black and white; these days, he is as diverse as the children who believe in him. Even Macy's iconic Santaland experience has expanded its offerings to include a Black Santa and a Spanish-speaking Santa, with more options in the works.

"At Macy's, we believe that Santa is all things to all people who find joy in his goodness and kindness," Kathleen Wright, the director of production operations for Macy's Santaland, told the-Grio over email.

"We treasure the memories that families have made and shared with us over the years and enjoy being able to accommodate requests from near and far."

When you can't get to a Macy's that offers the Santaland experience, that's where performers such as Douglas come in. In addition to traditional Santa meet-and-greets, the Black Santa Houston offers a Black Santa experience for corporate and private events and holiday photo shoots.

Douglas said during the holiday season, he starts his long, jolly days at 8 a.m., setting the mood with Christmas music before greeting children and their parents.

Some of the children are bursting with excitement, some are shy, and, of course, some cry — but he ensures that all leave with a timeless memory of a Santa who looks like them.

Douglas credits Butler-Coleman with instilling the importance of offering all families a high-quality experience.

"So years from now, when these kids look at these pictures, whether they're laughing in the picture or crying, it's going to be something that they reflect on, and it's gonna be a great memory for them for years to come," he said. "To just think that I'm a part of that is a very

"So years from now, when these kids look at these pictures, whether they're laughing in the picture or crying, it's going to be something that they reflect on, and it's gonna be a great memory for them for years to come...To just think that I'm a part of that is a very humbling experience."—Kelvin Douglas

humbling experience."

As an educator, Douglas is also keenly aware of how the timeless holiday memories he now helps create can have a lasting impact on children's imaginations and conceptions of what they can be.

"It is crucial because it gives them that reinforcement that they can be anything that they want to be, and that's important," he said.

He explained that when children don't see themselves reflected in roles in society such as doctors, lawyers, teachers, entertainers, and so forth, they start to develop an internal narrative telling them they could never be those things.

He added, "So when they begin to see Black Santas and Black doctors and Black lawyers and Black teachers, they know that they can also become that themselves — and even a Black president. It's important that [Black children] always see themselves reflected in society."

It's not just the children who are benefitting from the representation; Butler-Coleman said families travel from around the country to Houston for her Santa experience, and not just for their children.

"They want their children to have this experience. But what I have learned is it's actually also the parents wanting an experience they didn't have as a child. So they are all having full circle-of-life moments with the children, and it is beautiful," she explained.

Since the Black Santa Houston's launch, the company has experienced significant growth. Due to demand, the operation now includes four different Santa performers and three different Mrs. Claus performers. Last year, Butler-Coleman, whose background is in healthcare finance, secured her first commercial space for the company, officially establishing Santa's home base in Houston. The business was also awarded the Wells Fargo Open for Business Grant through The Houston Equity Fund.

Building on the success and popularity of The Black Santa Houston, Butler-Coleman recently launched a family sleepwear line. Through the WYNTRY Collection, Black families can bring the experience home with them in matching pajamas with Black and brown holiday characters, including Santa.

Butler-Coleman noted, "It's hard to capture in words this experience, because we haven't reached our full potential. We meet the most amazing families, and they're the reason we're thriving."

Douglas added, "We pinch ourselves every day thinking about how far this company has come."
