In California, a barbershop helps Black men cope with mental health issues

The Greater Sacramento Urban League has served hundreds with barbershop group therapy sessions, including at Kendall Robinson's Five Starr Fades. —theorio.com article

A California barbershop is offering more than hair-cuts as it aims to help Black men cope with mental health issues.

Kendall Robinson has cut Black men's hair while also taking the time to listen and talk to them about their issues at Five Starr Fades for decades, according to Spectrum News.

"The barbershop is one of the most safe places you to allow the Greater Sacramento Urban League to host monthly evening group therapy sessions called Cut to the Chase.

can go and feel relaxed," said Robinson, noting that the familial feeling led him iligo, an autoimmune disorder that causes parts of the skin to lose pigment or color.

"I have to look at the man in the mirror and say, 'Man, I don't like what I look like today,'" said Robinson.

"But today, because of the men I'm affiliated with, I have better coping skills now."

A recent study conducted by the California Health Care Foundation revealed that around 50% of Black Californians who suffer from mental health issues say they receive poor treatment from medical professionals, Spectrum reported.

GSUL's chief impact officer, Dr. Troy Williams, said the introduction of the barbershop sessions was partly motivated by the study's results and the realization that Black people need additional mental health services.

"We knew that there was a decline in mental health, and we knew that our community needed access to mental health services," said Williams.

"So eventually when we created this program, we absolutely knew that the turnout would be phenomenal."

Williams said the program, scheduled at two sites, has served over 450 people in six months, attributing part of the success to the mental health professionals at the sessions.

Given the workshops' success, Robinson, Williams, and therapist Bryant Howard, who collaborates with GSUL, shared that there will soon be sessions in salons for Black women.

"It's so important that we're doing these here because there's no stigma here," said Howard, Spectrum reported.

"There's no stigma to having a conversation about what's real inside anyone in particular. So we can talk about really, really deeper level things."

The American Psychological Association reported that the issue of police brutality against Black men, epitomized by the Minneapolis police killing of George Floyd, highlighted the unique mental stressors experienced by Black men.

Psychologists recommend innovative approaches such as community programs held in barbershops and other local venues, outreach through technology and social media, and national networks dedicated to advancing Black men's mental health and well-being.

Dr. Wizdom Powell, an associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Connecticut and director of the Health Disparities Institute, emphasizes that the more systems and providers adopt culturally relevant methods to support Black men's mental health, including addressing racial trauma directly, the greater the benefits for society as a whole.

"We should place less emphasis on whether Black men are resistant to therapy," said Dr. Howard C. Stevenson, a national expert in helping people of color address and recover from racism, APA reported, "and more on understanding the contexts in which they already feel comfortable talking about their feelings and traumas."

He continued: "If a Black man is able to find a treatment that is culturally responsive, that he understands, and that embraces the uniqueness of his difference, he is more likely to use that service."

5 things to consider when looking for charities to support

By HANIYAH PHILOGENE,

In the spirit of giving, here are five things to consider when looking for year-end contributions for 2024's deductions.

As 2023 twirls into its grand finale, and we start dusting off our resolutions for the new year, let's talk about something that doesn't just sparkle for the season but has the power to illuminate the entire year: charitable giving.

But, let's be real — choosing the right charity can sometimes feel like navigating a jungle of options. Fear not! We've got your back.

Before unleashing your philanthropic superpowers, consider these five tips to ensure your giving game is on point.

Decide which causes mean the most to you

Today, there are a plethora of organizations working to address various problems in society and around the globe.

Whether its focus is education, mental health, or physical health among men, women, or children, these organizations each work toward a unique mission in hopes of bettering their communities.

So, instead of blindly giving to the first organization you see, experts say one of the first steps in making a difference is narrowing down which issues you want to focus on.

This decision could be based on your personal experiences or any major events that may have occurred in your personal life this past year.

For instance, if you or a loved one experienced any health issues, you may be more inclined to give to an organization working to give marginalized communities access to better health care.

Do you want to give locally, nationally, or globally?

Once you've determined what initiatives you'd like to support, the next step is deciding if you want to give a global, national, or local organization.

Depending on the cause you decide to focus on, you may find that there are a number of organizations working toward solving an issue just on different scales.

While they all do impactful work, giving locally and keeping it close to home adds a personal touch to your giving journey.

Understand the various ways to give

All donations are not monetary donations. Although monetary donations can be tax-deductible, you can also make an impact in your community by volunteering your time and skills at local charities and organizations.

Volunteermatch.org is a platform "bringing people and communities together through service" by matching them to volunteer opportunities based on their location and areas of interest.

Finding your perfect charity match

Now that you've decided what type of organization you want to support and what type of donation you want to make, the final step is finding the specific organization you want to give to. While it may seem as simple as a Google search, the search for charities that are actually active and giving back to their community can be tricky. A charity's financial health is like your credit score — you want it high.

Check out their financial reports to ensure your hard-earned dollars are making a real impact with platforms like charitynavigator.org, give-well.org, or charitywatch.org.

Similarly, if you're looking to support Black charities and nonprofit organizations, Support Black Charities, The Giving Gap and Charity Navigator have directories of Black-founded charities across the country tackling a number of issues.

Give some and win some

Let's talk coins! Year-end giving isn't just about spreading love; it's also about strategic tax moves. Check if the charity is a registered nonprofit and if your donation qualifies for that tax deduction. If you give by Dec. 31, it's like giving back and getting a little something for yourself — a win-win.

have such a powerful and positive impact on your body, mind and soul, so it's an authentic collaboration that truly connects to my personal and professional interests."

Over the years, Megan has become many women's "body goals," and the star has not been shy about what it takes to maintain her admired physique.

From posting her intense workouts on social media to following a healthy, balanced diet, the "Houston Hottie" explained that she works "really hard to maintain [her] fitness routine and stay committed to getting the results [she] wants."

While her workout routine helps maintain her physical health, the mental health advocate shared how maintaining an exercise regimen also helps her get through tough times.

"I love how working out brings mental clarity and physical energy, so I trust the process and grind it out. "There are always going to be tough days, but I remind myself that exercise is an investment into my long-term physical and mental health," she explained. "Physical and mental health go hand-in-hand, and it's a huge priority for me.

For such a long time, our society had a negative stigma around mental health, so I'm committed to doing my part to normalize the conversation and provide people with the right resources to get the necessary help." With a fierce, fitness goddess-like persona, Megan Thee Stallion's character, "Mother Fitness," encourages gymgoers to let go of high prices and intimidation in the new campaign. Encouraging mind and body wellness to take center stage in the new year, the gym chain is allowing new members to join for $0.24 down with no commitment from Dec. 30 to Jan. 12, 2024.

New and old members of Planet Fitness will gain access to the partnership's unique augmented reality (AR) filter, along with free in-app Planet Fitness workouts inspired by Megan and her passion for fitness.

Additionally, the "Body" rapper and Planet Fitness have created a line of co-branded exclusive merchandise in honor of their collaboration.

Available at the online Planet Fitness store, proceeds from "Thee Judgement Free" collection will go to the Pete & Thomas Foundation, a nonprofit the rapper founded focusing on education, elder care, mental health, and women's empowerment in her native Houston, Texas.

THE TOBACCO INDUSTRY PROFITS BILLIONS KILLS MILLIONS WE STAND BEHIND A MENTHOL BAN

The tobacco industry has targeted Menthol cigarettes to African Americans for decades

An FDA ban on the manufacture and sale of menthol cigarettes will increase health equity and could save up to 650,000 lives, including more than 250,000 Black lives within 40 years.

So, don't believe the tobacco industry hype about law enforcement coming for you to enforce this policy.

The FDA said it can't and won't enforce the ban against individual consumers for possession or use of menthol cigarettes.

Please join us in supporting this vital action to improve Black health.
