Lena Taylor sworn in as Milwaukee County Circuit Court Judge

Former state Senator Lena Taylor is now a Milwaukee County circuit judge after her swearing in ceremony at the Milwaukee County Courthouse Monday.

She takes the position formerly held by Judge Audrey Skwierawski, who resigned to become state court administrator. Taylor will preside over misdemeanor cases that aren't related to domestic violence.

Taylor was first elected to the state Assembly in 2003 following a special election. She was then elected to the state Senate in 2004 and has represented Milwaukee at the Capitol for more than 20 years.

Taylor, who also had a private practice as a lawyer, said she felt the time was right to focus all of her attention on the courtroom.

"At some point, being able to have the opportunity as a lawyer to go back to my roots, the place

I started—in the Milwaukee courthouse—was always something that I wanted to do," Taylor said.

Governor Tony Evers will now call a special election to fill her Senate seat this spring.

Taylor said Evers had asked whether she was interested in a about whether or not I wanted to become a judge right after he got elected [five] years ago," Taylor said. "But at that time, I told him it was something I wanted to do, just not then."

As a circuit court judge, Taylor will get a big raise, at least in terms of what she's paid by tax-

Milwaukee Brewers celebrate local and state teachers!

The Milwaukee Brewers recently celebrated the Wisconsin educators who improve the student achievement and use innovative strategies to make a difference in the lives of their students as it recognized and honored 2023 Grand Slam Teachers.

The event took place at J. Leinenkugel's Barrel Yard at American Family field. Brewers infielder Owen Miller and Brewers alumnus Larry Hisle were on hand to recognize and interact with award recipients and their guests.

They also spoke on the importance of educators impact and share personal stories about the teachers that affected them. Three Black U.S. Army reservists killed in drone attack near Syrian border

By Stacy M. Brown, NNPA Newswire Senior National Correspondent @StacyBrownMedia

Three Black American reservists from the 926th Engineer Brigade, based at Fort Moore, Georgia, lost their lives in a drone attack on a U.S. base near the Jordan-Syria border. Pentagon Deputy Press Secretary Sabrina Singh identified the fallen soldiers as Sgt. William Jerome Rivers, 46, of Carrollton, Georgia; Spc. Kennedy Ladon Sanders, 24, of Waycross, Georgia; and Spc. Breonna Alexsondria Moffett, 23, of Savannah, Georgia.

The tragedy occurred at the logistics support base at Tower 22 of the Jordanian Defense Network, where approximately 350 U.S. Army and Air Force personnel are stationed. That base plays a crucial role in providing support for the coalition's efforts against ISIS, according to Central Command.

The attack marks the third drone strike on the outpost in the past six months, with the first two occurring in the latter half of the previous year being unsuccessful. Lt. Gen. Jody Daniels, chief of the Army Reserve and commanding general of the U.S. Army Reserve Command, said the murders of the three Black reservists cut deeply.

The U.S. government has determined that Iran was responsible for the attack, prompting President Joe Biden to vow a response. "There will be a response," Biden declared.

"We will never forget what Sergeant Rivers and his fellow fallen soldiers, Spc. Kennedy Ladon Sanders and Spc. Breonna Alexsondria Moffett, gave for our nation. May their memory live on in our continued service to our military families."

Black voters' support for Trump and his racially exclusionary philosophy defies explanation

Opinion by Marvin A. McMickle

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following opinion article, and the views expressed in it, are the author's own.

Black voters are shifting to Donald Trump? The New York Times reported in early November that 22% of Black voters in six key battleground states (Arizona, Georgia, Michigan, Nevada, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin) told pollsters they would support Donald Trump over Joe Biden in the 2024 presidential election.

Four years ago, only 8% of Blacks nationally voted for Trump, the Times noted.

This must be a great concern for the Democratic Party in general and for President Joe Biden in particular.

For me, this shift in the voting patterns is impossible to understand.

What is it about the rhetoric and resume of Donald Trump that might cause Black voters to shift their support from 8% in 2020 to 22% in 2024?

What do these Black voters find so appealing in this twice-impeached, four-times-indicted candidate who lost the 2020 election by over seven million votes?

Do these Black voters agree with Trump's "Big Lie" that he actually won in 2020, but the election was stolen from him through voter fraud? Never mind the fact that over 60 courts and judges from across the country looked at Trump's claims of fraud and dismissed them as baseless.

Why would Black voters support someone who referred to Haiti and many nations in Africa and Asia as "shole nations? Why would Black voters support someone who said in 2017 that there were "very fine people, on both sides" after Nazis, white nationalists, and KKK members marched in Charlottesville, Virginia, chanting "Jews will not replace us?"

Why would Black voters support someone who is currently invoking the language of Adolf Hitler when he refers to some persons already living in this country as "vermin" whom he will "root out," and speaks about some people seeking to immigrate to this country as "poisoning the blood of our country?"

Why would Black voters support a candidate for president who has consistently assaulted the competence and integrity of three Black law enforcement officers seeking to hold him accountable for his words and deeds?

They are: Fani Willis, who is the District Attorney in Fulton County, Georgia; Alvin Bragg, who is the District Attorney in Manhattan in New York City; and Latisha James, who is the Attorney General for New York State?

Why would Black voters support someone who peddled the false "birther" narrative claiming that President Barack Obama was born in Kenya and should have been disqualified from serving as president?

Let's approach this shift to Donald Trump in another way.

What is it about Joe Biden that prevents these Black voters from staying with him in the next election? Are Black voters unaware of or unimpressed with the jobs created through the American Rescue Plan and Bidenomics?

During Trump's administration from January 2017 to January 2021, more jobs were lost than were gained. Are these Black voters not concerned that Trump's biggest political accomplishment was a massive tax cut for the wealthiest Americans?

Meanwhile, Biden has signed into law bills that have reduced childhood poverty, begun the major renovation of this nation's infrastructure, initiated the first meaningful gun control legislation in 30 years, and addressed the COVID-19 pandemic that Trump largely ignored?

Are Black voters who might be struggling with diabetes unmoved that Biden has successfully capped the cost of insulin at $35 per month? Meanwhile, Trump is talking about repealing the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare), with no other plan to take its place.

Are Black voters concerned that Joe Biden is too old to serve as president even though Donald Trump is only three years younger and quite a few pounds heavier?

Do Black voters want as their president a man with strong authoritarian tendencies and an affinity for dictators in Russia, Hungary, China, and North Korea?

Do Black voters realize that, in "Making America Great Again," they are embracing a return to white supremacy and a loss of many of the rights many Americans now take for granted? Is this the future that these Black voters want for themselves and their children? I certainly hope not! As Aretha Franklin once sang, "You better think!"

Sanders' parents shared that she volunteered for deployment to experience different parts of the world. With a history of military service in the family, Sanders had previously deployed to Djibouti and later volunteered for Kuwait, including a stint in Jordan near the Syrian border.

Rivers enlisted in the Army Reserve in 2011 as an interior electrician, according to the U.S. Army Reserve Command Public Affairs Office.

He served "with courage, honor, and a deep sense of duty, embodying the best of New Jersey and our nation," said Sen. Cory Booker (D-N.J.). "His death is a profound loss to his family, friends, colleagues, and our entire country, and a reminder of the heavy debt we owe to our military families for their sacrifice."

U.S. Rep. Andy Kim (D-N.J.), who represents Willingboro, said in a statement that Rivers served this country and local community with great honor and bravery. "We are indebted to him and his loved ones for their service and sacrifice," Kim stated. "We will never forget what Sergeant Rivers and his fellow fallen soldiers, Spc. Kennedy Ladon Sanders and Spc. Breonna Alexson-dria Moffett, gave for our nation. May their memory live on in our continued service to our military families."

Moffett reportedly was no stranger to the military as both of her parents were veterans.

"I was like no you should, but you know she went anyway, because of her dedication to her county, she really really honored her job," Saryha Truell, one of Moffett's lifelong friends, told WTOCTV.

"We are reminded that the brave men and women who defend our great nation put their lives on the line each and every day to keep our country safe," said Brig. Gen. Todd Lazaroski, Commanding General of the 412th Theater Engineer Command.

"Their service and sacrifice will not be forgotten," Daniels stated.

Each week seems to bring a fresh headline featuring a dog attack, stirring public debate and concern.

This trend has led authorities in recent years to implement breed-specific legislation, with measures that often include bans or severe restrictions on certain breeds, notably pit bulls, rottweilers, dobermans, and other large breeds.

These laws have sparked a counter-argument among large breed enthusiasts who contend that it's not the dogs that are inherently dangerous, but rather the training and treatment they receive from their owners.

In response to this debate, movements advocating for responsible dog ownership have gained momentum across the country, presenting a humane alternative to breed-specific bans.

A California personal injury law firm, Bisnar Chase, undertook a comprehensive study to examine this contentious issue.

Their goal was to gauge whether public skepticism is directed more towards the so-called 'dangerous' breeds or the owners who may fail to provide proper training.

They surveyed 3,000 people, asking them to reflect on their personal encounters and identify the dog breed owners in Wisconsin they find least trustworthy.

Public Perception Rankings: The Breeds and Their Owners
#1 Pit Bulls: Topping the list, Pit Bull owners are perceived as the least trustworthy in Wisconsin, a stigma fueled by media portrayals and controversial headlines.

However, advocates argue that pit bulls can be among the most loyal and affectionate breeds when raised in a loving environment.

#2 Rottweilers: The second least trusted dog owners are those who own rottweilers. Owners of this German breed are often met with skepticism.

Despite the breed's capacity for loyalty and guardianship, the imposing nature of rottweilers can be intimidating if not paired with rigorous and consistent training.

#3 Wolf-Hybrids: Landing in 3rd place are owners of wolf-hybrids.

Known for their close genetic ties to wild wolves, these canine owners face skepticism due to the unpredictable nature often associated with these animals.

The debate continues on whether their wild instincts can be entirely domesticated.

#4 German Shepherds:

German Shepherds are fourth on the list among Wisconsinites, which may surprise some given their esteemed role in police and service work.

Nevertheless, the breed's strong protective instincts can be misinterpreted as aggression, highlighting the need for thorough training and socialization.

#5 Bullmastiffs: Known for their strength and protective nature, Bullmastiffs can be gentle giants under the guidance of a firm, caring owner.

#6 Siberian Huskies: Taking the sixth spot, Siberian Husky owners often face trust issues from the public, largely due to the breed's independent nature and resemblance to wolves.

Owners must actively work to channel the breed's energy and intelligence in positive ways.

#7 Doberman Pinschers: In the seventh position, Doberman Pinschers and their owners are often viewed warily.

Historically bred for protection, these dogs can exhibit a powerful presence that demands an owner who is committed to their disciplined training.

#8 Boxers: At eighth, boxer owners are often perceived as having their hands full managing the high energy and playful antics of their pets.

While boxers are generally friendly, their boisterous behavior requires dedicated training to manage effectively in public spaces.

#9 Akitas: Akitas carry a noble stature and a reserved temperament, and while they can be fiercely loyal, they require an owner who understands the nuances of the breed to prevent aggressive tendencies.

#10 Alaskan Malamutes: Similar to Siberian huskies in their thick fur and robust build, Alaskan Malamute owners are challenged to meet their high exercise needs, often a point of contention for those unfamiliar with the breed.

With cases of Respiratory Syncytial Virus (RSV) rising across Wisconsin, the Department of Health Services (DHS) is urging pregnant Wisconsinites to get the vaccine to protect their baby from the virus.

As of January 10 there have been 1,402 people in Wisconsin hospitalized with RSV this season, 580 of those are children under age 2.

The RSV vaccine Abrysvo can be given to people who are pregnant between 32 weeks and 36 weeks and 6 days of pregnancy and provides protection for newborns until they are 6 months old.

The vaccine was approved for use in 2023 and is safe and effective. People who are pregnant should ask their health care provider if they can get the vaccine.

“This RSV vaccine provides protection to the infant for the first six months after they are born,” said DHS Respiratory Disease Epidemiologist Tom Haupt. “That provides the baby protection at a time when they could be vulnerable to serious illness.”

A different option to protect infants is a monoclonal antibody shot (nirsevimab). Children under 8 months of age can receive nirsevimab, but it is important to know that nirsevimab is currently in limited supply.

This is why it is especially important for people who are pregnant to get the RSV vaccine, which is readily available, to ensure their infants are protected.

The RSV vaccine is also available to all adults aged 60 and older. There are two RSV vaccines available for this age group: Arexvy and Abrysvo. Both vaccines are safe and effective.

Aging and older adults, individuals who are pregnant, and new parents should contact their health care provider to determine if RSV vaccination or preventive treatment is recommended for them or their infant.

In addition to the RSV vaccine, DHS urges everyone 6 months and older to get the flu vaccine and updated COVID-19 vaccine.

This is especially important for people who are at greater risk of becoming seriously ill, this includes those who are pregnant, age 65 and older, and those with chronic health conditions. Wisconsinites can find locations offering the flu and COVID-19 vaccine by visiting vaccines.gov or calling 211 or 877-947-2211.

Besides vaccines, there are steps we can all take to help stop the spread of germs and viruses:

- Wash your hands often with soap and water for 20 seconds.
- Avoid touching your nose, eyes, and mouth.
- Stay home and away from others if you feel sick.
- Avoid being around others who are sick or have respiratory illness symptoms.
- Cover your nose and mouth when you cough or sneeze and encourage children to do the same.
- Wear a high-quality mask around others to prevent the spread of respiratory illnesses.

With Lena Taylor now a judge, who will be the community's political tree shaker?

My heart skipped a beat when I received the press release announcing state Senator Lena Taylor had been appointed by the governor to fill a vacancy on the Milwaukee Circuit Courts.

The heart palpitation wasn't rooted in a lack of appreciation; I was elated that a sister of Lena's talents, perspectives, and commitment to social justice would serve the people as a jurist.

But my elation was tempered with a sense of anxiety with the realization that we have simultaneously lost one of the most influential voices in our Black political circle.

Lena was 'the' spark plug, the tree shaker at both the state and local level. She is/was a forceful advocate who frequently—and to the dismay of the political status quo—brings to mind the Robert F. Kennedy quote that posits: 'instead of asking why, ask why not?'

Lena was also a thorn in the side of the state Democratic Party's status quo, initially prompting me to question Governor Tony Evers' 'true' motivation in making the appointment.

Was it to diversify the courts with a qualified African American jurist? Or was it to remove the prickly needle in the butt of the Democratic Missionary Machine network?

Some believe—myself included—that Evers followed the stratagem used by Milwaukee Mayor Chevy Johnson when he appointed his top critic, Ashanti Hamilton, to a position outside the political arena.

While Lena hasn't targeted the governor as much—at least not publicly—she has not been as civil with other members of the Madison Missionary Mob (MMM or 'M3'). As history has repeatedly advised, challenging the 'great white hopes' by putting our interests before their agenda will generally result in a significant 'backlash' (pun intended).

We should never forget what the MMMs did to the late Black Nationalist and fiery state Rep. Polly Williams for daring to challenge educational apartheid and, thus, the control of the teachers' union over the Dem Party.

Polly took on the role of Harriet Tubman, not only in hue and mission, but fighting the same Democrats who, 70 years ago, literally and figuratively blocked the schoolhouse door. Check your history; those were Southern-fried 'Demo-rats'!

They did everything but tar and feather Polly as she exposed her party's 'true' agenda.

Like Tubman, Polly emerged as an educational abolitionist, as her words continue to resonate a message for Black America: 'no permanent friends, no permanent enemies, just permanent issues.'

When Polly retired, the MMM (or 'M3') turned their attention to state Rep. Jason Fields, whose crime was walking on the same side of the street as a Republican, which, as you know, is a crime unless you're Sheriff David Clarke or Senator Tim Scott.

As I reported then, 'King Missionary' (and Democratic state Senator) Chris Larson was at the vanguard of the Field's assault.

Yes, the same 'White Knight' who called Nikiya Dodd his 'nappy haired friend,' who then boldly suggested Lena was on drugs after she refused to bow down to kiss his...er ring.'

Larson quickly learned you don't push a sister too far, as she pimped slapped him across the legislative chamber floor.

Larson is the self-anointed king of the 'Missionary wing' of the Demo Party—the branch that posits they 'know what's best for Black people,' which is nothing more than another form of racism.

And that included (reportedly) talking Mandela Barnes into running against Jason.

Later, and apparently still stinging from Lena's pimp slap, 'Da King' (reportedly) persuaded Barnes into running against her.

Again, wrong sister, although Mandela was rewarded for his disingenuous campaign by being selected for the Lt. Governor's slot.

Lastly, I have serious concerns about who will replace Lena—who has the testicles (or womb) big enough to fill her shoes.

“Lastly, I have serious concerns about who will replace Lena—who has the testicles (or womb) big enough to fill her shoes. Not just in terms of their size but more so the willingness to forcibly shake the tree, to put our people before the party.”

Not just in terms of their size but more so the willingness to forcibly shake the tree, to put our people before the party.

Several names have been rumored, including Barnes, who has been rewarded with a cushy job supposedly arranged by his MMM sponsors.

None of the names being floated have the temper, tolerance, or tenaciousness of Lena.

Who can we count on to assume the role of Mike McGee, Sr., the fiery former alderman and Black Panther who took no prisoners in his commitment to improving Black life—by any means necessary.

McGee was a straight shooter who beat up Klansmen on television and took that same attitude into city hall.

He scared the hell out of the status quo, which responded to his threats by working with less aggressive Black aldermen.

It was a perfect example of an expendable shaking the tree so others could pick up the overly ripe fruit.

Now, more than ever, we need another McGee to not only throw rocks at the castle wall, but to threaten to pull it down, brick by bigoted brick.

As a community, we need to be honest with ourselves: One of the reasons Milwaukee is listed as the worst city in the United States for Black residents is ---highest poverty and prison rates, most segregated housing, and lowest 4th and 8th grade African American reading scores in the country—is because there is no one willing to step outside the political box to get something done beyond rhetoric.

Of course, that wouldn't be necessary if there was a consensus, unified Black political agenda. For reasons beyond logic, there is none.

In other words, don't expect the Black state lawmakers to collectively retreat to Chicago to protest Black concerns as they did when former Republican Governor Scott Walker called for a vote on his repressive Act 10 bill.

Face it, most Black Democratic legislators are akin to assembly line doctors who provide pills to ease the pain, but nothing to cure the illness.

They are party loyalists first and rarely will buck the system.

I count three who go beyond the status quo, who will put their people before the party, but none will be as forceful a tree shakers as Lena or who 'wanna be like Mike.'

I won't tell you who they are because if you truly cared, you would know---if for no other reason than being a fan of this column or reading something besides a cereal box.

And if you don't, or don't feel the need to find out, I'm wasting my breath---or fingers.

Losing Lena in the state legislature will cost us a critical voice in our struggle.

The fact that Dems Missionaries and White Freedom train drivers hate Lena should be the reason for us to realize her importance.

I'm not suggesting Lena should have refused the appointment. In truth, with her on the bench, we will benefit on another level.

But while I see a communal profit in her appointment, I am also forced to accept that she was a spark in the slow-burning engine of the freedom train, which was barely chugging along with her.

And now that her muscles will no longer be available, the train may grind to a stop, leaving us to hope another Black conductor comes along.

Or an electric train stops long enough to pick up the weary passengers.

After Sen. Tim Scott, R-S.C., professed his love for Donald Trump while stumping in New Hampshire, Black leaders say the Republican Party's highest-ranking Black man is an embarrassment to the African American community.

"There are few moments in my life I've been more embarrassed than to watch Tim Scott," the Rev. Al Sharpton said on MSNBC of Scott's remarks at a Tuesday night Trump campaign event. He added, "It was humiliating to watch what Tim Scott did as a sitting senator."

After giving brief remarks at the victory rally, Scott interrupted Trump when the former president and leading 2024 Republican candidate jabbed at his remaining opponent, Nikki Haley, the former South Carolina governor who appointed Scott to the Senate in 2012.

"You must really hate her," Trump said after pointing out the irony that Scott endorsed him over Haley despite that appointment and their South Carolina connection. The senator quickly jumped to the mic to respond, saying with a wide smile, "I just love you."

Sharpton said, "It's not a good day in my life to watch him do that." The civil rights activist continued, "We fought to see people like him, Black, become a high elected in the South."

"He has a right to be Republican. He has the right to do Donald Trump," said Sharpton, who does not personally align with Scott's politics. "But to do it in such a way that is so humiliating was troubling."

Antjuan Seawright, a Democratic strategist and a South Carolina native, agreed with Sharpton, telling

“HUMILIATING!”

Seawright, who serves as an adviser to longtime Rep. James Clyburn, D-S.C., said that when the senator had a chance during Trump's presidency to "strongly disagree on issues that matter to our community" or "highlight where there has to be some separation from white supremacy, white nationalism, Christian white nationalism, bigotry, and hate," Scott "didn't take the opportunity."

"If you love Trump, then that means you love Trumpism and all the things that come along with Trump," he argued. "Those things don't align historically with those who look like us."

He added, "At some point, values have to matter."

Angela Angel, senior adviser at Black Lives Matter PAC, said of Scott: "All skinfolk ain't kinfolk."

"Tim Scott has denied that systemic racism exists, bragged about increasing police funding, and downplayed the impacts of slavery on Black Americans," she told theGrio. "His latest shuck and jive should come as no surprise. He has clearly shown us who he is."

Seawright agreed with Sharpton that, as a conservative Republican, Scott has the right to have differing political beliefs. However, he said the senator's latest actions may leave many questioning "where his head and heart really are."

"Tim Scott has enough political cache. He doesn't need to do all that he is doing for the former president. In particular, it's a slap in the face to the former governor [Haley] because he would not be in the U.S. Senate without her," explained the political strategist.

As Trump has demonstrated in his attacks on fellow Republicans who disagree with him, Seawright noted that for the former president, "Loyalty is a one-way street."

"Trump is OK with Tim Scott as long as Tim Scott is OK with Trump," he contended. "The minute there is a half a degree of separation, then Trump will back the Trump bus up and roll it over Tim Scott like he's done everyone else who has been loyal to him."

After quickly endorsing Trump upon ending his own presidential campaign, Scott ignited chatter that he could be tapped by the Trump campaign to be the former president's vice presidential running mate. Days later, Scott, once a notorious bachelor, announced that he was engaged to marry his girlfriend, Mindy Noce, who only recently had been known publicly.

Seawright predicted that if Scott were on the Republican ticket with Trump, this recent clip of him declaring his love for the former president would become campaign "material" for the Biden-Harris reelection campaign.

He added, "If Tim Scott is on the ticket with the former president as a nominee, I certainly think that not only that clip, but his positions, like a national abortion ban, will become an opportunity for folks to be educated about where he stands."

Editor's note: The following article is an op-ed, and the views expressed are the author's own.

Will Black people turn out for the Democratic Party? Why is Biden losing the support of Black men? Are Black voters really embracing the GOP? Who will stop Candace Owens' Blexit movement now that Diddy, Charlamagne and the Shade Room are no longer on the proverbial "Democratic Plantation?"

These are the questions that need answering. But, as the 2024 election cycle gradually shifts into high gear, your favorite pundits, political analysts and professional commentators are finding new ways to discuss and dissect the upcoming presidential sweepstakes. As usual, these pseudo-soothsayers have settled on one segment of the electorate as the most important factor in what could be the season finale of American-style democracy.

The "Black vote." According to Newsweek, Donald Trump is poised to win more Black votes than any Republican in history, and Pew Research notes that "Black voters could play an important role in determining the outcome of key 2024 elections, including for U.S. president."

Even though an October poll found that nearly four out of five Black voters wouldn't vote for Donald Trump, the New York Times chose to characterize less than 100 Black Trump supporters scattered across six stats as a national negro "drift to Trump."

To be fair, Rep. Matt Gaetz, R-Fla., may have just been repeating something he heard at a high school dance when he recently bragged: "There's a Julio and Jamaal ready to sign up for the MAGA movement."

Let's get this out of the way: Black people are not going to vote for a Republican. It ain't gonna happen.

Nearly a century has passed since a Republican presidential nominee even came close to winning a majority of the Black vote (Herbert Hoover in 1928 was the last).

It is asinine, bordering on malpractice, for a journalist to publicly suggest that one of the most vociferously anti-Black candidates could achieve what no Republican has done in the last 96 years.

Setting aside the media's lazy, inexplicably stupid exercise in speculative fiction, one wonders why the mainstream media narrative seems to intentionally avoid the one

SANDY SPRINGS - NOVEMBER 08: A "Vote Here" sign is seen outside a polling place on November 8, 2022 in Sandy Springs, Georgia. After months of candidates campaigning, Americans are voting in the midterm elections to decide close races across the nation. (Photo by Alex Wong/Getty Images)

The lazy, stupid analysis of the 'Black vote' obscures the most important political issue of our time topic that — when it comes to presidential elections — is more important and more mathematically relevant.

OPINION: If the future of American democracy is really on the ballot, why aren't we discussing the one issue hovering over the upcoming election?

What about the white voters?

I haven't seen the insurrection polling data or the turnout from Trump rallies but judging from the hyperbolic handwringing on cable news, you'd almost think that Black people make up the majority of voters in this country.

The same organization (Pew Research) that said that thing about the "important role" of Black voters in 2024 knows that 55% of non-Hispanic whites voted for Trump in 2020, while 92% of Black voters, 59% of Hispanics and 7% of Asians voted for his opponent.

Political scientists concede that white voters of both parties are more likely to switch parties when the candidate is Black.

The New York Times article about Black voters drifting to the GOP didn't even mention white people!

Why the erasure?

This is the white vote. In 2020, the white vote made up 67% of the electorate, yet pundits are willing to hopscotch over the "white vote" because they already know what white people will do at the ballot box.

Whether it is Democrat or Republican, white voters have not been as concerned with party politics as much as they have been obsessed with whiteness.

Historically, the majority of white people in America always, always always vote for the opposite of what Black people want.

Poor whites will vote for a party that opposes raising the minimum wage, taxing the rich and providing health care because, in white identity politics, policy does not matter.

White women will support politicians who want to control their reproductive rights because whiteness matters more.

Suburban moms want good schools and safe neighborhoods but vote for candidates who oppose police reform and accurate history.

This is the white vote.

I struggle to think of a single other issue that is discussed in such an intentionally obtuse manner.

Imagine if ESPN only talked about special teams during their football coverage or if your child's first-grade English teachers refused to discuss vowels.

What if the Weather Channel only covered places where the sun is shining? Even when someone dares approach the issue, the "white vote" must be euphemized as "soccer moms" or "NASCAR dads" — as if we don't know who the "rural voters" wearing "blue collars" in "red districts" are referring to.

It's almost like they're trying to build a narrative.

White voters are the reason why democracy is in peril. It was white insurrectionists who stormed the Capitol. White people put those dimwitted election deniers in Congress. It was white voters who helped install Supreme Court justices who stripped away reproductive rights.

It's white people who are banning affirmative action, abortions and American history. While the Black vote is important, the only reason the subject is even worthy of discussion is because of what white voters keep doing.

Someone should really talk about it.

White voters matter.

“Even though an October poll found that nearly four out of five Black voters wouldn't vote for Donald Trump, the New York Times chose to characterize less than 100 Black Trump supporters scattered across six stats as a national negro ‘drift to Trump.’”
