WHITE SAN FRANCISCANS AND THEIR CAMPAIGN OF RACIAL TERROR!

By Khafre Jay, from his LinkedIn page/2022-23

County Board Unanimously Adopts Resolution Encouraging Investment at Wisconsin's Only Black-Owned Bank!

San Francisco's Bay Area, despite its facade of liberalism and progressivism, is a glaring example of America's deep-rooted racism. Its history is steeped in sinister policies crafted meticulously to subjugate and oppress Black communities.

San Francisco's pretense of being a beacon of progress is laughably transparent when one dives into the dark depths of its past, with Local Law 30 standing out as a chilling testament to its bigotry.

Beneath the veneer of liberal values, white communities, and racist politicians, it thrived, championing such policies and mercilessly driving Black San Franciscans into a harrowing abyss of poverty, violence, and death.

It is beyond reprehensible how one of the most purportedly 'forward-thinking' cities became a death trap for its Black residents.

Local Law 30 was no simple policy; it was a tool of oppression, a weapon of mass segregation.

Orchestrated with deep prejudice and empowered by the ruling elite, it dramatically reshaped San Francisco's urban tapestry.

Rather than allowing neighborhoods to emerge from natural economic and cultural currents, this law dictatorially determined residence by skin color.

The Hunters Point, Western Addition, Oceanview, Sunnydale, and Fillmore districts became prison-like enclaves for Black San Franciscans, as they were funneled into these confined areas, resulting in deliberate ghettoization and economic extraction: internal colonialization, if you will.

Under the watchful eyes of Local Law 30, white neighborhoods like Pacific Heights, Sea Cliff, and Noe Valley flourished egregiously.

The hefty investments made by San Francisco and the federal government ensured their property values skyrocketed.

These areas reveled in elite schools, pristine streets, and a plethora of community amenities funded by tax dollars that were siphoned away from Black communities.

With the law as their bulwark, they remained insulated from the so-called "threat" of integration.

Yet, beneath this cloak of prosperity lay a virulent system of racist apartheid, where one group basked in privilege and wealth, shamelessly built on the suffering and suppression of another.

Black communities, conversely, were caged into congested areas with deteriorating infrastructures. This form of urban apartheid denied them access to quality education, jobs, and essential amenities. Over time, these neglected neighborhoods, products of forced segregation, became hotbeds of poverty and crime, not by any inherent flaw of the Black community, but due to the structural violence inflicted upon them.

Justin Herman, whose name once graced San Francisco's waterfront plaza, isn't just a footnote in the city's urban development history.

For many Black San Franciscans, Herman was far more than a city planner; he was a manifestation of systemic racial oppression, an embodiment of the very policies that sought to erase Black communities from the fabric of the city.

If San Francisco's history of racial prejudice had a face, for many, it was Justin Herman's.

Herman assumed the helm of the San Francisco Redevelopment Agency in the 1950s, a time of transformative urban change across the country; under the guise of "urban renewal," cities aimed to clear "blighted" areas, often translating to the displacement of marginalized communities.

In San Francisco, these policies disproportionately impacted Black residents.

Herman's leadership saw the bulldozing of vast portions of the Fillmore District, often called the "Harlem of the West" due to its vibrant Black community and cultural significance.

Thousands of Black residents were displaced, their homes and businesses razed, replaced by properties they could neither afford nor access. Promises of new housing were broken, and entire communities were fragmented and forced out. As a result, Black people regarded him as the arch-villain in the black depopulation of the city.

Yet, for decades, Herman was lauded for modernizing San Francisco. His influence was so profound that, until recently, one of the city's prominent public spaces bore his name.

However, modern retrospectives of his legacy paint a more complicated, often damning picture.

The spaces he "renewed" stand as a testament not to progress but to the deliberate and calculated erasure of Black life and culture from San Francisco.

The dissonance between the city's celebration of Herman and the lived reality of Black residents displaced and critically reassessing his impact is essential if the city hopes to understand and address its racial past genuinely.

Gaslighting and Racial Wedges

Following the manipulative successes of Local Law 30, US policies began to liberalize immigration from Asian countries in the mid-20th century.

However, even this shift was tainted by San Francisco's insidious political machinations. Instead of embracing these new immigrants as allies in a diverse society, white racist politicians in San Francisco saw an opportunity to further their oppressive agenda.

While African Americans

This policy siphoned money away from Black residents and cunningly inserted a wedge between two minority populations.

By pitting them against each other in an economic battle where only one could seemingly win, the white establishment created social rifts, further ensuring that these minority communities remained divided and easier to control.

This inter-colonialism forms the basis of the communities we see today.

The prevailing narrative, which is both misleading and grossly unfair, paints Black individuals as architects of their own misfortune.

Yet, it's evident that the debilitating poverty, resulting vi-were systematically denied loans to establish businesses in their own neighborhoods, olence, and overwhelming sense of desperation that permeated Black communities were direct consequences of policies like Local Law 30.

The white communities and politicians that championed these divisive policies weren't merely silent accomplices, as well.

They took on active roles, meticulously erecting barriers of division. Notable among them was Mayor George Moscone, whose name is plastered all over the city, often hailed as a progressive force, yet under whose leadership policies like Local Law under his tenure is emblematic of San Francisco's broader struggle with racial history.

Recognizing Herman's role

Asian immigrants were often encouraged and supported to set up businesses within these very Black communities.

White San Franciscans and their campaign of Racial Terror!

These politicians, with the backing of influential white communities, fashioned themselves as the self-appointed vigilantes of their era. Their mission?

To maintain the purity of their neighborhoods at any cost. Under their watchful eyes, "neighborhood watch groups" sprung up — but let's call them what they truly were: racial gatekeepers.

Armed not with weapons but with prejudice, they kept a vigilant lookout, ready to raise the alarm at the sight of any Black individual who dared to cross into "forbidden" territories.

This was not mere oversight or a byproduct of bureaucratic policies. It was a deliberate and methodical campaign to deepen divides and sow mistrust.

With every suspicious glance and report made against a Black individual simply trying to live, they further dug the trenches of segregation.

My father often spoke about black children who mistakenly crossed San Bruno Street and how the firefighters at the station on Silver Street would beat black kids up in order to protect "their" white spaces.

These were not isolated incidents. The aftershocks of their actions are still palpable today, a testament to the profound rifts they created between communities.

Despite Black individuals constituting only about 5% of San Francisco's population, they now make up a distressing 37% of the unhoused community.

This gross disproportion isn't an isolated statistic—it's a bleak testimony to the to how the white voters really feel about black people.

Compounding this has been the recent tech boom, which, while catapulting San Francisco to global prominence, has simultaneously accelerated gentrification at an unprecedented rate.

As tech wealth floods the city, property values soar and rental rates skyrocket, further exacerbating the displacement of the very communities that have been economically marginalized for years.

The modern glitz and glamour of San Francisco, with its thriving tech hubs and renovated neighborhoods, is built upon a foundation riddled with systemic inequalities.

The juxtaposition of tech affluence with the rising Black unhoused population underscores a bitter truth: San Francisco's "progress" has come at a devastating cost for its Black residents.

The influx of affluent, predominantly white tech professionals, many of whom come from areas outside of San Francisco, brings with it not just economic change, but political influence.

Often unfamiliar with the city's longstanding racial struggles and the history of systemic racism, they misattribute the socio-economic disparities they witness not to deeply embedded structural issues but to perceived individual shortcomings.

This lack of understanding and empathy isn't merely academic—it is swaying policy decisions with real, tangible consequences for Black residents and other communities of color.

A glaring example of this influence is the recent ousting of the only three people of color from the San Francisco School Board, which further silenced marginalized voices in key decision-making processes.

Furthermore, policies aimed at providing aid to the unhoused — such as affordable housing initiatives, mental health services, and job training programs — are consistently voted down or met with strong opposition.

This political maneuvering, driven by a combination of ignorance and indifference, not only perpetuates the marginalization of the last remaining Black San Franciscans but also reinforces the structures that lead to brutal policing and continued suffering.

In this tech-era San Francisco, the promise of innovation is being overshadowed by a resurgence of exclusionary politics and blatant white supremacy.

Acknowledging this painful past isn't about cultivating guilt, although if you need, feel free to feel so. Rather shining a light on the festering wound that continues to afflict San Francisco essential of black lives are to matter.

Until the city faces the white supremacy and prejudice ingrained in its policies and structures, any claim to liberalism, let alone progressivism, rings hollow.

In truth, without a full and sincere reckoning of its history, San Francisco must relinquish its self-proclaimed liberal mantle and accept its ignominious position as one of the most racially prejudiced cities in the nation.

County Board Unanimously Adopts Resolution Encouraging Investment at Wisconsin's Only Black-Owned Bank

The Milwaukee County Board of Supervisors unanimously adopted a resolution supporting investment in Columbia Savings & Loan by the County Treasurer.

This new initiative aims to drive economic empowerment and foster racial equity within the community through investment in the state's first and only Black-owned bank.

Chairwoman Marcelia Nicholson propelled this resolution along with co-sponsors Supervisors Coggs-Jones, Taylor (Dist. 5), Martinez, Rolland, Taylor (Dist. 17), Clancy and Johnson Jr. The resolution, crafted in collaboration with the Milwaukee County Treasurer David Cullen, encourages the Treasurer's Office and other relevant Milwaukee County departments to explore depositing funds in Columbia Savings & Loan, helping support initiatives that increase capital availability for low- and moderate-income families in Milwaukee County.

Chairwoman Nicholson issued the following statement:

"Taking action to invest in Columbia Savings & Loan is a decision to invest in the prosperity of our community.

"This resolution highlights our commitment to supporting Black-owned businesses in Milwaukee and addressing the wealth gap. By investing available public funds with the state's first, and now only, Black-owned bank, we are contributing to the revitalization of Black communities in Milwaukee. This is just the beginning."

Columbia Savings & Loan, set to celebrate its 100th anniversary this year, is currently conducting its "100 by the 100th" campaign.

This initiative seeks to secure $10 million in new funding to facilitate homeownership for 100 families by the end of 2024.

The campaign and this resolution acknowledge the significance of increased homeownership as a critical indicator of the overall health of a community.

The adopted resolution will now be sent to the desk of the County Executive for approval.

"Taking action to invest in Columbia Savings & Loan is a decision to invest in the prosperity of our community. This resolution highlights our commitment to supporting Black-owned businesses in Milwaukee and addressing the wealth gap. By investing available public funds with the state's first, and now only, Black-owned bank, we are contributing to the revitalization of Black communities in Milwaukee. This is just the beginning."

Regina King is opening up about her experience with grief since her only son, Ian Alexander Jr., died by suicide two years ago.

During a preview clip of an upcoming interview with Robin Roberts for “Good Morning America,” the Academy Award-winning actress said she is a different person now than she was on Jan. 19, 2022, contending that “grief is a journey,”

People reported.
“Grief is love that has no place to go,” she said, noting, “We all handle it differently.”
King told Roberts that her upcoming film, “Shirley,” is dedicated to her late son.
Her only child with her ex-husband, record producer Ian Alexander Sr., had just turned 26 when he died.
King commemorated Alexander’s birthday last year, plus paid tribute to him a year after his passing with a tribute on Instagram.
“January 19th is Ian’s Worthday. As we still process his physical absence, we celebrate his presence,” she wrote. “We are all in different places on the planet ... so is Ian. His spirit is the thread that connects us.”
King shared that orange was her son’s favorite color, and she sees him in everything she breathes. The “Shirley” star also said her “favorite thing” about herself is that she is “Regina, the mother of Ian the God-King.”
“Continue to shine bright, my guiding light,” she wrote.
