JOY AND FREEDOM RETURN TO AMERICA!
Democratic Presidential Candidate, Vice President
KAMALA HARRIS, and Democratic
Vice Presidential Candidate,
Gov. TIM WALZ, bring down TWO houses at once at Democratic National Convention!

Earlier this week, as the Democratic Party were holding its national convention at the United Center in Chicago, Vice President and Democratic Presidential Candidate Kamala Harris, and Democratic Vice Presidential Candidate, Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz were at Milwaukee's Fiserv Forum for an election rally that was simulcast from the 'Brew City' to the convention goers in the 'Windy City.'

As the party conducted its role call from every state, Vice President Harris got 15,000 people in Milwaukee 'Fired-up and ready to go!' As the crowd waved Freedom signs, Harris and Walz told the energetic Fiserv gathering how she and her running mate would tackle the issues confronting the nation: the economy, abortion, freedom to be safe from gun violence, more affordable housing, lower drug prices, and the freedom to make decisions about your own body. They also touched on the evils of 'Project 2025,' which strips away many of the 'freedoms' Americans now enjoy and that are the foundation of what America is about. Oh, and the Obama's brought down the house at the United Center.—Photos by Darryl Johnson and Kim Robinson

BLACK CHURCH, BLACK MEN(TAL) HEALTH

Black churches have the potential to increase the effectiveness of the support they provide to congregants—Black men in particular.

By Michael A. Robinson, Natasha LaBalle —Article courtesy of publichealthpost.org

EDITOR'S NOTE: This article was first posted six years ago. But the subject of mental health, especially as it relates to Black men, has no expiration date. Though the statistics have probably changed since it originally appeared online, its overall message is just as relevant in 2024 as it was in 2018.

Black men in the United States experience unique, sociocultural stressors that affect their physical and mental health.

As a result, Black men not only have poor health outcomes, they also have the shortest life expectancy compared to other races and women.

Despite these differences in health and life expectancy, developing a body of evidence on the health of Black men has been slow.

More research on the physical and mental health of Black men is necessary.

We have been exploring the ways in which the Black Church provides spiritually and culturally relevant services for Black men in their communities.

Our work complements previous research about religion, spirituality, and health focused on Black women.

Previous research has shown that Black individuals are less likely to use mental health services even though they experience levels of distress similar to individuals of other racial/ethnic backgrounds.

A Black man's decision about whether to seek help for his mental or physical health is influenced by gender norms and cultural beliefs.

Black men may also experience racism in the healthcare system or financial barriers to care.

These factors result in Black men not using professional mental health services and instead relying on others such as clergy or family members.

The church has always been a significant institution within the Black community and it has connections to many other institutions such as Black colleges and universities and the NAACP (the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People).

Membership in Black Churches has remained steady or increased at a time when many religious institutions have declining memberships.

Almost 50% of the Black individuals surveyed in 2014 by the Pew Research Center attended religious services weekly.

Among those attending church 32% were men. Those who attend church regularly are more likely to seek help for spiritual and personal problems from clergy.

continue to positively affect the lives of many within the Black community, they can enhance the support they provide to many of their congregants.

Two theoretical frameworks can help Black Churches to increase the effectiveness of the support they provide to congregants and Black men in particular.

The Body, Mind, Spirit, Environment, Social, Transcendent (BMSEST) model is based on Maslow's hierarchy of needs. It acknowledges the relationship between spirituality and well-being and thus complements the healing work being done in the Black Church.

“While Black Churches continue to positively affect the lives of many within the Black community, they can enhance the support they provide to many of their congregants. Two theoretical frameworks can help Black Churches to increase the effectiveness of the support they provide to congregants and Black men in particular. The Body, Mind, Spirit, Environment, Social, Transcendent (BMSEST) model is based on Maslow’s hierarchy of needs...

ually-sensitive, culturally-competent, and empirically-based community interventions to support Black men’s mental and physical health needs. Combined, these theoretical frameworks can improve the Black Church’s ability to address the mental health needs of Black men.

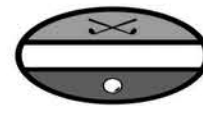

The church is a preexisting source of strength and support in the Black community, but it has a responsibility to do more for Black men given their poor physical and mental health outcomes.

Our recently published review summarizes existing research and introduces these models as a strategy Black Churches can use to better meet the needs of men.

Black academics and professionals need to collaborate with the clergy of Black Churches to develop and implement programs that are spiritually-sensitive, culturally appropriate, and grounded in evidenced-based practice.

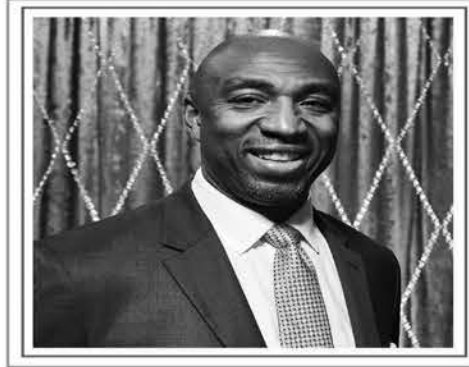

It is time to devote our attention to the mental health challenges experienced by Black men.

...It acknowledges the relationship between spirituality and well-being and thus complements the healing work being done in the Black Church. The Health, Illness, Men, and Masculinities (HIMM) model, by contrast, emphasizes understanding gender as a determinant of Black men’s physical and mental health.”

LET'S EAT! Thursday, August 22 was 'WORLD JOLLOF DAY!'

Who gets to claim West Africa's best-known dish?

As jollof rice makes its mark in the U.S. culinary scene, chefs talk appropriation, appreciation, and what makes it West Africa's most revered and hotly debated dish.

By Eden Harris, courtesy of thegrio.com

Since its inception, diasporic debates have been held about who makes the best jollof, a West African dish traditionally comprised of spiced rice and vegetables.

Thanks in large part to social media, in recent decades, these discussions have also reached across the Atlantic, as diasporans and their descendants from throughout the Western part of the continent continue to assert that their respective country's version of the culinary specialty is superior.

Though many West African countries put their unique spin on the dish, the origin of jollof, also known as Thieboudienne, can be traced back to the Wolof Empire of Senegal (c. 1200 – 1600), giving the dish its name.

Each country currently dominating the debate has long since adapted the dish to its local preferences, with Ghana using jasmine rice, Nigeria using par-boiled rice, and Senegalese using short-grain or broken jasmine rice.

However, the debate has also entered mainstream conversations in the United States. This spring, Chase Sapphire Reserve presented a promotional campaign called "Taste of West Africa" featuring Emmy Award-winning actor Michael B. Jordan.

Seated at a dinner table amongst West Africans, Jordan posed the commonly asked and eternally loaded question: "So, what jollof rice is the best?"

Predictably, a man representing Ghana claimed his country as the best — as did a woman from Senegal, and a Nigerian male guest.

Wherever the dish is served, Renny Vonne, a Nigerian chef, says making good jollof entails a "great combination of rice and the tomato pepper base," adding, "The tomato pepper base includes bell peppers and scotch bonnets, but in the diaspora, we tend to use habanero peppers because we can't get a hold of scotch bonnets often, and [we use] onions. And then for additional flavor, people might add ginger and garlic."

A historic delicacy entering the mainstream has its risks

However, as jollof has now entered culinary scenes outside of the diaspora, Vonne warns that while recreating such dishes might be viewed as "appreciation," it is equally "dicey" because "there isn't mainstream education on West African dishes."

"We haven't had a chance to tell our stories regarding food, and it can be very controversial when another chef, like a white chef or a European chef, decides to educate people about how it's done, and they don't even do it properly," she shared.

Many have tried to recreate the jollof dish, with varying degrees of success. Stateside, recipes can be found in outlets like the New York Times (crafted by Nigerian food writer Yewande Komolafe).

"We haven't had a chance to tell our stories regarding food, and it can be very controversial when another chef, like a white chef or a European chef, decides to educate people about how it's done, and they don't even do it properly..."

—Nigerian Chef Renny Vonne

However, in 2014, English celebrity chef Jamie Oliver made up ingredients for a jollof dish, which was met with swift backlash on the internet from Africans, calling his concoction "#JollofGate" and saying, "Our plates will not be colonized."

Vonne explained that Oliver put lemon and the wrong type of tomato in the Jollof, noting, "It's very terrifying when he takes a completely different spin on the dish."

She said the right way to interpret the dish without appropriating it is to not misrepresent it because "it can be very difficult to accept, and oftentimes that's how it ends up being controversial."

Not only are European chefs taking a stab at the dish, but many chefs in the United States have as well.

Danielle Harris, a Michelin Guide-recognized Black chef who serves a jollof-inspired dish at her Washington, D.C.-based Afro-fusion restaurant, Almeda, shared what inspired her to try her hand at it — and ultimately add it to her menu.

Harris explained that her jollof journey began when culinary entrepreneur Michael Sparks commissioned her to create a menu based on the Netflix onization.

"Many folks believe that gumbo is inspired by bouillabaisse [a French dish]. It's not. When you look at any known dish in New Orleans, the obvious thing is rice; when you look at Senegal, most of our dishes are rice-based ... you can see the roots from between the two countries," Mbaye notes.

The episode not only inspired Harris, but when it comes to her Afro-fusion dishes, the chef leads with honesty about what they are and what they aren't — and doesn't take credit for their flavor profiles or origins.

"I always tell people that it's not jollof; it's a fusion of the two. And when we present this to our tables, we say it's a jollof-inspired risotto, she says. "I don't claim it to be the original jollof. I'm not in the jollof wars about who has the best one."

While Harris doesn't engage in the ongoing jollof debate, she is using her knowledge and cultural sensitivity to expand Almeda, hopefully enabling a larger clientele to experience and appreciate her tribute to jollof in the nation's capital.

When asked if it is appropriate for African Americans to play a role in creating and promoting jollof rice, Nina Oduro, a Ghanaian who is CEO and co-founder of Dine Diaspora, a company that educates people about African cuisine, responded: "I think having ancestral lineage that is tied to a particular cuisine is something to be proud of, but not something to gatekeep or something to hold away from anyone. I think African Americans have a premier, important connection to Africa as they are akin. They are akin to Africans."

Will the great jollof debate ever end?

"The jollof wars [are] not even a war to end," Oduro said. "It is really about pride in your heritage and your culture and the connections and the diaspora."

This delicious aspect of shared culture is now officially in the zeitgeist. Netflix's hit series "Supacell" recently joined the jollof debate to promote their series, with castmates playfully arguing which country has the best jollof on Instagram.

Vonne argues: "It is now 2024. No one's jollof is better than the other because everyone has their preference. Of course, you are going to think your country makes it best because that's what you like."

Groundbreaking Ceremony Announced for Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park

Project leaders, public officials and sponsors to gather for first dig on Sept. 5

Downtown Milwaukee will soon welcome a new addition to its vibrant community. The official groundbreaking celebration for the Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park will take place Thursday, Sept. 5 at 3 p.m.

The much-anticipated development is a collaborative effort led by Milwaukee Downtown, Business Improvement District #21 (BID #21) and the Historic Third Ward Business Improvement District #2 (BID #2), and is made possible sible by thousands of donors.

Located at 103 W. Clybourn St., the project will be Downtown's first and only public dog park.

"Since announcing plans for Downtown's first dog park at this underutilized space, excitement for the project has continued to grow," said Matt Dorner, economic development director for Milwaukee Downtown, BID #21. "Businesses of all sizes, philanthropic partners and thousands of residents have pledged their support for this vital amenity. While fundraising efforts continue, their enthusiasm for the project has brought us to this exciting juncture."

The Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park aims to provide a safe, enjoyable space for dog owners and their furry friends to socialize and exercise.

The 22,000-square-foot park will include separately fenced areas for small and large dogs, water stations, upgraded lighting and other pet amenities, as well as prominent donor recognition and opportunities for community programming.

Fromm Family Pet Food, title sponsor of the project, has played a crucial role in bringing this project to life. The development of the dog park was instrumental in attracting Fromm to the adjacent parcel, where they are now developing the 28,000-square-foot Foxtown Landing brewery, distillery and restaurant. This new establishment, with its extensive outdoor spaces, will revitalize one of the few remaining unused parcels along the Milwaukee River.

Additionally, the entire project will be connected to Downtown's pedestrian network by a new Riverwalk segment running from St. Paul Avenue to Clybourn Street.

"We are thrilled to be the title sponsor of the Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park," said Tom Neiman, owner of Fromm Family Pet Food. "As a family-owned business committed to the well-being of pets, we believe this new amenity will enhance the quality of life for both dogs and their owners in the community. We're delighted to be part of the upward momentum taking place in the greater Downtown area."

In addition to Fromm Family Pet Food, the project has garnered widespread support from a diverse group of sponsors and public sector partners. The project continues to attract new sponsors, including its most recent pack of supporters: the Milwaukee Admirals, Berghammer Construction, Veolia and Off Leash K9 Training, LLC. The project is also backed by thousands of individuals who have pledged support from across the region. Public sector partners include the Wisconsin Department of Transportation, Federal Highway Administration, Milwaukee County and the City of Milwaukee.

The Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park is the crown jewel in a series of projects that Milwaukee Downtown, BID #21 and the Historic Third Ward BID #2 have successfully undertaken to enhance connectivity between the two neighborhoods. A dog park is a long-overdue amenity for the Downtown area, and is sure to transform the corridor, which sits alongside one of the busiest entryways to Downtown and the Historic Third Ward.

"The Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park area will be revitalized to meet the growing demands of our residents, employees and guests," said Paul Schwartz, executive director of the Milwaukee Public Market and BID #2. "The groundbreaking celebration is an opportunity to thank all of our committed partners, sponsors and those that have supported the project from the beginning, while also engaging new champions on the sponsorship opportunities still available."

The groundbreaking ceremony will take place at 3 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 5 at 103 W. Clybourn St. with representatives from BID #21, BID #2, Fromm Family Pet Food, public officials and project supporters. The Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park is expected to be complete in late 2024.

For more information on the Downtown Milwaukee Dog Park, donation and sponsorship opportunities, and the groundbreaking ceremony, visit www.mkedog-park.com.
