ELECTION WATCH 2024

There's an election coming up! Here's what you need to know!

Milwaukeeans will go to the polls on Tuesday, Nov. 5 for the general election.

In addition to presidential candidates, there will be candidates for Congress, which include the Senate and the House of Representatives.

But what do those people do? Angela Lang, the executive director of Black Leaders Organizing for Communities, or BLOC, said federal elections impact how some parts of state budgets are able to be resourced.

"People may remember the child tax credit that happened during the pandemic," she said. "Or any of the COVID resources, like construction made possible through some of the ARPA (American Rescue Plan Act) dollars."

Legislation, oversight and working with constituents are three main responsibilities of Congress, according to Philip Rocco, associate professor of political science at Marquette University.

"The Constitution gives Congress, which is composed of two chambers, the Senate and House, immense power over really important national policy making, and that ranges from the power to tax, the power to coin and borrow money, the power to regulate interstate commerce, the power to spend money for defense and for items related to the general welfare," Rocco said.

Milwaukee Brewers' Jackson Chourio Becomes Youngest Member of MLB's 20-20 Club

Milwaukee Brewers Centerfielder Jackson Chourio hit his 20th home run of the season against the San Francisco Giants recently, vaulting the 20-year-old rookie into the esteemed '20-20 Club'. Most eyes may be fixed on a handful of other rookies this season, but that hasn't stopped Chourio from making history. The 20-year-old former top prospect helped the team secure a 3-0 win over the Giants, delivering a two-run home run to right in the top of the eighth inning. Chourio finished the evening 1-for-4, and he was the only Brewer to record more than one total base. Dr. Ramard Wright: Healthy Living and Care of Family Pets

Dr. Ramard Wright

By Kathy Gaillard

Dr. Ramard Wright, veterinarian and owner of Wright's Brown Deer Animal Hospital, recalls how trips to his grandfather's cottage in Dodge County as a young boy influenced his career choice.

He loved going there, being immersed in nature, and, ultimately, those trips helped him decide to become a veterinarian.

Dr. Wright and his two siblings were raised by a single parent in the WAICO housing area of Milwaukee, located just north of downtown Milwaukee next to Carver Park.

After graduating from Riverside High School, he attended Tuskegee University for two years before returning to Milwaukee and completing his education at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Once he earned an undergraduate degree in biology, he headed to the University of Wisconsin-Madison School of Veterinary Medicine, graduating with a degree of Veterinary Medicine in 2008.

For the past 20 years, his passion for veterinary medicine has never waned.

"Veterinary doctors are always busy and more veterinarians are needed, especially Black veterinarians. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics' latest data in 2018, only about 2% of the U.S. veterinarians are Black Americans."

He not only cares for animals of all species at work, but his home mimics his office—sort of. "We have five dogs, two cats, a snake (boa constrictor), and a large parrot," said Dr.

Wright.

Fortunately, he and his wife, Candice, have a large family to help take care of those animals.

After a busy day's work, Dr. Wright returns home to 10 children, including his triplet girls.

His oldest child is 25 years

What you need to know about the November 5 general elections!

Each state has two senators, who are elected on a staggered basis to six-year terms.

Senators write, review and vote on legislation and serve on one or more committees.

The Senate requires a supermajority of votes in most cases to cut off debate on a bill and call a vote, which can drag out the legislative process.

“So for a party that holds the presidency and a majority of House seats, holding a simple majority of Senate seats is usually not enough to enact its legislative program,” Rocco said.

The Senate confirms the president’s Cabinet, judicial and diplomatic appointees by holding hearings on a nominee’s qualifications.

In November, Wisconsin Democratic Sen. Tammy Baldwin is up for reelection. Her main challenger is Republican businessman Eric Hovde.

Also on the ballot is Phil Anderson, of the Disrupt The Corruption Party and Thomas Leager, of America First Party.

“As senator, I am elected by the people of Wisconsin to work for them and ensure their voices are heard in our federal government,” Baldwin said in a statement to Milwaukee Neighborhood News Service.

Baldwin said she meets with people throughout the state to hear their thoughts on different issues.

“I then take everything I hear back to Washington to cast votes and draft bills that will deliver solutions to make Wisconsin families’ lives better,” she said.

Hovde did not respond to a request for comment.

What does a representative in the U.S. House do?

The House of Representatives is made up of 235 representatives who serve two-year terms.

Like senators, U.S. representatives work on passing legislation and often can move bills faster than the Senate.

“When bills come to the floor in the house, they come with a rule attached to them that specifies how many hours of debate they will get,” Rocco said.

Representatives hold hearings on legislation or investigations through their committees.

The House has exclusive power to start revenue bills, impeach federal officials and elect the president if there is a tie in the Electoral College.

Wisconsin has eight representatives in the House. Milwaukee falls into District 4, where U.S. Rep. Gwen Moore (D-Milwaukee), is up for reelection against Republican Tim Rogers and Independent Robert Raymond.

What does a state senator do?

Both state senators and representatives work on writing and voting on bills that become state law if the Legislature approves and the governor signs them.

The legislature determines a state budget every other year. Most officials oversee a staff that works with people in their districts.

State senators approve political appointees made by the governor, including Cabinet secretaries, and each senator serves on one or more of 20 committees.

State senators are elected to four-year terms. Each of the 33 members of the state Senate represents roughly 175,000 people.

What does a state representative do?

“A state rep. is also a part of things like the budget process and different policies and legislative issues,” Lang said. “They work between negotiating back and forth bills and also the budget as well.”

State representatives work on writing and reviewing legislation. A representative serves on one or more of 37 committees.

Wisconsin’s 99 state assembly members are elected to two-year terms. Each member of the Assembly represents roughly 59,000 people.

Many of the state assembly seats are in “safe” districts, which are dominated by either Republican or Democratic voters.

Some of these districts had primary races in August but now only have a candidate from one party expected on the ballot.

Lang said it’s important for people to understand that the presidential campaigns typically have more resources to pay for ads than local candidates.

“And so it’s important to make sure we’re paying attention on all levels, and understanding that it’s more than just voting, it’s also staying engaged year round,” she said old and the youngest is 1-1/2. He said that he hopes at least one of his children will one day take over the practice.

Dr. Wright admits that as a veterinarian, every day is different and brings with it unique challenges.

On any given day he may have to operate on animals, take x-rays, or guide animal owners through their grieving process.

“There’s never a mundane day. Human doctors tend to engage in medical specialties—pediatrics, OB-GYN, ophthalmology—but veterinarians are basically ‘jack of all trades.’

“Everybody thinks they want to become a veterinarian, but with this profession comes blood, surgeries, and euthanasia.

“A veterinarian does everything, for all kinds of animals,” he said.

Veterinary doctors are always busy and more veterinarians are needed, especially Black veterinarians. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics’ latest data in 2018, only about 2% of the U.S. veterinarians are Black Americans.

Dr. Wright said that during the covid pandemic, since people were ‘hunkered down’ at home many decided that it would be a good time to buy and care for pets.

“Veterinarians were already busy but, since covid, it is even more busy and there is a shortage of veterinarians.

“I visit schools and festivals to try to talk to students and encourage them to consider veterinary medicine as a viable career option. It is a tough but fulfilling career.

“Veterinary doctors experience some of the same issues with pet owners as human doctors. There are issues of obesity, exercise, diet and behavioral issues.

“Sometimes I’m even called upon to become a therapist, helping pet owners understand why they should not spoil their pets, or explaining the proper way to foster good, healthy relationships with animals.

“I become part of the family. They trust me and follow my advice. Sometimes I deal with 50 animals a day. When they have to be euthanized (which I do), I try to be the rock for pet owners to lean on when these decisions are necessary,” he said.

Dr. Wright recognizes that the seed for his profession were undoubtedly planted during those visits to Dodge County as a young boy and he recognizes that he stands on his grandfather’s shoulders.

“My grandfather will be 95 years old. We’re taking him to Punta Cana, Dominican Republic to celebrate his birthday. He’s a hell of a man.

“He taught me to have responsibility, courage and dedication to be successful. He gave me lots of advice, but I always remember that he told me to “do your best at whatever you’re good at, and you’ll never fail,” said Dr. Wright.

Cong. Gwen Moore votes to support passage of critical child welfare legislative package

On Wednesday, Congresswoman Gwen Moore voted to support of H.R. 9076, bipartisan legislation reauthorizing federal funding for child welfare related services and programs, which aim to reduce barriers to help children in foster care return home, prevent abuse and neglect, and help stabilize families.

This bill will not only increase funding for programs but take steps to strengthen efforts to support family preservation and kinship care, and help families impacted by

The bill also includes a provision I helped author addressing issues that tribes and some states have faced in intercepting federal tax refunds as part of their child support enforcement efforts.

“We need to ensure that IV-B funding is meeting the needs of children and families who are interacting with the child welfare system, including children and families who are in foster care, or to support broader services like child protective services and pre-foster care family stabilization or support.

MCW chosen as one of only 11 institutions nationwide and will focus on reducing injury disparities.

The Comprehensive Injury Center (CIC) at the Medical College of Wisconsin (MCW) was recently designated an Injury Control Research Center (ICRC) by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). Representing the injury prevention and control field’s national designation, being named an ICRC recognizes the CIC’s leadership, nationally known expertise, and skill in building impactful partnerships to advance injury and violence prevention efforts.

As a newly designated ICRC, the Comprehensive Injury Center at MCW will receive $4.25 million over the next five years and its primary focus will be reducing disparities in injuries that occur in Milwaukee and throughout Wisconsin.

Injury is one of the leading causes of death in the U.S. for adults and is the leading cause of death in children. Significant disparities exist when it comes to who is injured and how, when and to what extent people recover. The burden of injury is greatest for specific racially, ethnically and socioeconomically marginalized individuals. Milwaukee County consistently ranks among the top for highest burden of injury types in Wisconsin.

“We know that injury and violence disproportionately impact certain groups. With this funding, we will be able to significantly advance the injury science research at the Medical College of Wisconsin to prioritize health equity and reduce

MKE County Hosting Workshops for Community to Share Input on Street Safety Improvements

This summer, Milwaukee County Executive David Crowley signed legislation affirming Milwaukee County's commitment to Vision Zero and combatting reckless driving, traffic violence, and fatal and serious injury crashes by the year 2037.

As part of this effort and the Complete Communities Transportation Planning Project, the Milwaukee County Department of Transportation (MCDOT) is hosting five Safer Streets Workshops across the county.

The purpose of these events is to share potential safe streets redesign and infrastructure solutions for Milwaukee County's Corridors of Concern (roadways with the highest safety risks based on community feedback and crash data history).

MCDOT will feature a handful of these Corridors of Concern at each meeting based on their proximity to the meeting location. "Enhancing the safety of our roads is one of the most important issues facing the health, well-being, and economic vitality of our community."

"We simply must increase multimodal safety and reduce reckless driving," said County Executive Crowley.

"I am encouraging community members to attend one of our upcoming workshops to provide input about making our roads safer for all who use them — because lives depend on it."

The Safer Streets Workshops will be an open house format with informational materials and activities designed for residents to provide opinions on which safe streets solutions may work best on the roadways and intersections they use every day.

All are welcome to join at the following community locations:

injury disparities," said Dr. Terri deRoon-Cassini, ICRC principal investigator and professor of surgery (trauma and acute care surgery) and director of the Comprehensive Injury Center at MCW. "As one of only 11 research institutions in the country to be designated as an ICRC, this presents a unique opportunity for us to take MCW's Comprehensive Injury Center to the next level, increasing our investment in injury research and boosting our engagement with communities and organizations most impacted by injury and violence."

Specifically, the CDC funding will enable the CIC to further collaborate with community partners, public health agencies and healthcare systems to identify and reduce disparities in the burden of injury, as well as to disseminate research findings and share injury data in support of communities working to reduce injury disparities. Additionally, the CIC will develop, implement, and evaluate training and education for audiences in the community engagement, research, public health and clinical aspects of injury science. The funding will also support four large-scale research projects focused on prevention of traumatic brain injury, opioid overdose, firearm violence and suicide.

"The Medical College of Wisconsin's selection as an Injury Control Research Center underscores our unwavering commitment to addressing the most pressing issues that impact the communities we serve," said John R. Raymond, Sr., MD, president and CEO of MCW. "Every research breakthrough, every partnership, and every solution we uncover brings us closer to a future in which everyone will live in a safe and thriving community, regardless of background or circumstance."

ICRCs put research into action to prevent injuries and violence and are a key component of the CDC's National Center for Injury Prevention and Control.

'Fall into Hope' Voter Fest unites Milwaukee's faith communities for voter engagement ahead of critical elections

With November elections approaching, Faith in Place, a local environmental nonprofit organization, will host their 'Fall into Hope' Voter Fest, a nonpartisan event promoting voter participation through faith-based outreach. Taking place on Saturday, Sept. 28, 2024, from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. at Central United Methodist Church in Milwaukee, the event is expected to draw local leaders, families and activists to celebrate and encourage civic engagement.

The event comes at a crucial time, as the upcoming election holds significant stakes for communities like Milwaukee, where access to resources and voter education are essential.

Voter Fest seeks to remove barriers by providing critical voter resources and education, ensuring that everyone is prepared to make informed choices at the polls. Faith communities play a key role, serving as trusted hubs for mobilizing voters and fostering civic engagement.

Faith in Place plans to provide Milwaukee residents with nonpartisan voter resources, voter registration assistance and education to help them make informed decisions in upcoming elections. Local leaders are expected to deliver remarks during a short press conference held from 11 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., alongside other notable speakers, including:

- Samuel Liebert, Wisconsin State Director, All Voting is Local
- Maria Olsen, Green & Healthy Schools' Green Student of the Year 2024
- Rhonda Linder, Education Director at Tikun Ha-Ir and Statewide Interfaith Organizer for the Wisconsin Interfaith Voter Engagement Campaign (WIVEC)
- Alexander Malchow, Wisconsin Policy Coordinator, Faith in Place
- Tanya Crothers-Lewis, Wisconsin Outreach Coordinator, Faith in Place

An exciting highlight of the event will be a live, interactive art project led by a local Milwaukee artist. Attendees will have the opportunity to contribute to this communal piece, symbolizing the collective power of community voices and the transformative act of voting. This artistic initiative will be a powerful visual expression of hope and democratic engagement, designed to inspire attendees to take action at the polls.

"By participating in elections, we are taking crucial steps toward a democracy that truly serves the needs of all people," said Alexander Malchow, Wisconsin policy coordinator with Faith in Place. "This event is an opportunity for communities to lift up their voices and advocate for policies that reflect equity and care for our neighbors."

"Voter Fest is a powerful reminder of what we can accomplish together when we ensure every voice is heard. Voting is not just a right but a responsibility, and events like this build the momentum we need to protect that right for everyone. I'm honored to be a part of this movement and look forward to speaking alongside fellow advocates committed to fairness, inclusion and empowering communities through the power of the vote," said Sam Liebert, Wisconsin state director for All Voting is Local.

Rhonda Linder, Education Director at Tikun Ha-Ir, shared, "I'm here today living by my values, 'pray with your feet, pray with your vote.' I believe in the power of community and that we are indeed stronger together."

Families are also encouraged to attend, with a range of activities for children, including large outdoor games, crafts and sidewalk chalk. The event will also feature interactive booths with voter guides, art activities, a selfie station with fall and voter-themed props, and refreshments such as donuts and cider.

As part of its ongoing efforts, Faith in Place is committed to mobilizing people of faith across Wisconsin to support policies that protect people, the planet and a healthy democracy.

The organization believes that through voter registration, education and community involvement, communities can make a lasting impact at the polls—building a more just, equitable and sustainable future for all.

While the festival is focused on engaging the Milwaukee community, it welcomes all who wish to participate. This free event is open to everyone, encouraging broader civic involvement and fostering a sense of unity across communities and faith traditions. Participants can learn more and register by visiting: <https://bit.ly/voter-fest-2024> ask questions. This feedback will help shape Milwaukee County's Comprehensive Safety Action Plan, which MCDOT is currently developing with support from nationally renowned transportation safety experts, community stakeholders, officials from each municipality, and the public.

MCDOT aims to have the Comprehensive Safety Action Plan completed by February 2025. At that time, Milwaukee County will be eligible to apply for federal funding from the United States Department of Transportation's Safe Streets and Roads for All (SS4A) Grant Program to support design and construction of a select list of high-priority safe street redesigns and infrastructure solutions.

The first 20 attendees at each meeting will be eligible for a free high-viz vest giveaway (Limit 1 per household).

Moore votes to support passage of critical child welfare package

Foster Youth, I am proud that this legislation includes my proposal, which would allow existing funds to be used help struggling families meet their basic needs, so families aren't separated solely because of poverty.

That proposal, which was put forward with support of Ways and Means Chairman Jason Smith, also requires for the first time, that child welfare agencies highlight policies and training they have in place to ensure that children are not separated from their families solely because of poverty.

"This is an issue I have long championed and is critical to reducing racial biases and inequities in the child welfare system that have resulted in the disproportionate involvement of children and families of color.

"This bill also includes a provision I championed ensuring that the voices of those most affected by this system, including children with lived experience and community-based organizations, are involved and engaged in state planning efforts.

"This legislation also includes my measure to strengthen the ability of tribal governments and state and local governments to enforce non-payment of child support.

"Child Support is a critical source of payments for families and children, providing significant income for vulnerable families.

Being separated from family can be a traumatic experience that affects a child the rest of their lives. H.R. 9076 moves us closer to an overall child welfare system that better supports our children and families," said Congresswoman Moore.

"I was proud to lead a bipartisan delegation of governors this summer to urge Congress to pass the Strengthening State and Tribal Child Support Enforcement Act because without a legislative fix, thousands of Wisconsin kids and families—many of them already below the federal poverty line—are at risk of missing support payments they so critically need," said Governor Evers.

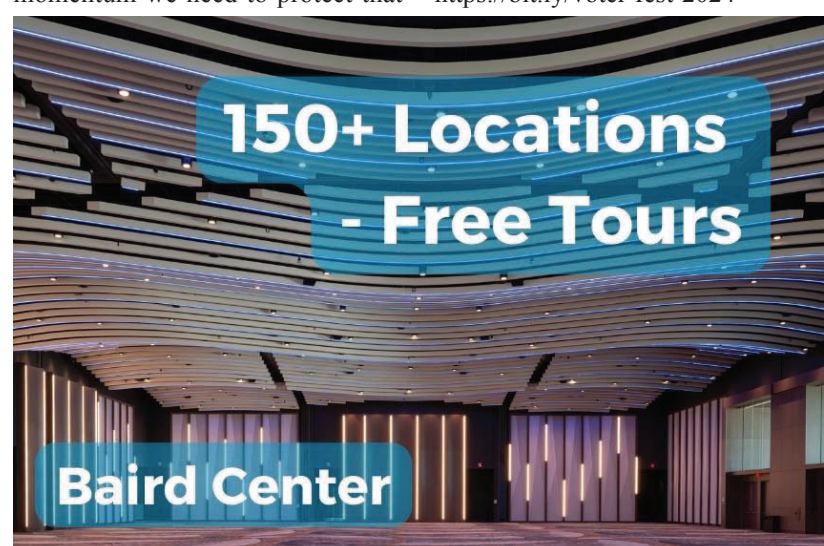

"This bill will make important changes to strengthen our child welfare system and ensure that every kid and family gets the support they need without disruptions, and I am grateful to the bipartisan group of leaders getting this done.

H.R. 9076 includes:
An increase in mandatory (non-appropriated) funding for the MaryLee Allen Promoting Safe and Stable Families program (PSSF) for the first time since 2006, raising it from $345 million per year to $420 million per year. Most of the new funding would increase the annual grants states receive for services that stabilize families to prevent foster care entry, address challenges so that children in foster care can return home, live permanently with family members, or be adopted, and support children and their families after they leave foster care.

The bill increases funding provided directly to Indian tribes for child welfare services, guaranteeing them 3 percent of overall IV-B funding, reducing administrative burden for tribes.

The legislation secures a $6 million increase in annual funding to support child welfare caseworkers.

The legislation provides up to $34 million (authorized) for demonstration grants to support meaningful relationships between children in foster care and their incarcerated parents.

Booties, Bowels, and Burials!

It speaks volumes that I, and TD's weekly conversations have deteriorated into discussions about booties, bowels, and burials.

former lifestyle and anxieties about community endeavors were too much for his body to handle).

Those topics dominated our weekly discussion last week-end.

Fortunately, our conversations about booties and bowels were under a humorous umbrella. In fact, most of our health-related talks are under the flag of allegories---hell, what else can you do but joke about them?

To clarify, both T and I suffer from various gastrointestinal problems, requiring numerous specialty rector examinations, most of which I can't pronounce, but include 'manual' prostate exams, balloon insertions, and colonoscopies.

We're getting older by the second, and some physical and mental changes are inevitable with age. There's no sense complaining; just laugh.

For me, It started with pancreatitis, which was common among my immediate family. Ten years ago, it almost killed me.

Both of us are at that age where deteriorating health is a predictor of age, as is learning about the deaths of friends, heroes and sheroes.

As such, I was required to have exams nearly every month, including an 'insertion' during physical therapy, prompting me to suggest to the pretty nurse that I had stereotypical images of gay lifestyles.

Over the years, our conversations have focused on social, cultural, and political issues.

(No offense to homosexuals, but the nurse's 'procedure' had me clinging to my heterosexual lifestyle with gritted teeth.)

Two weeks ago, our theme was the epidemic of youth violence (starting with the sad news of kids, as young as 13, beating up south-side elderly for fun), carjacking, drive-byes, and murder resulting from an idiotic conversation about disrespect--- a life-altering scenario which started because someone spoke out of line.

TD could relate to my discomfort, and given that he not only suffered from diabetes, but prostate cancer, I guess I should feel blessed.

Several months ago, TD was chastised by a radio jock for referring to violent teens as terrorists.

Here's what to know about the threats in Springfield, Ohio, after false claims about Haitian immigrants Donald Trump and his running mate, Ohio Sen. JD Vance, have amplified debunked internet rumors about Haitian migrants as the Republican ticket criticizes the immigration policies of President Joe Biden.

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio (AP) — A small Ohio city has been inundated with hoax bomb threats since last week's presidential debate when former President Donald Trump falsely accused members of Springfield's Haitian community of abducting and eating cats and dogs.

Trump's running mate, Ohio Sen. JD Vance, has amplified debunked internet rumors about Haitian migrants as the Republican ticket criticizes the immigration policies of President Joe Biden's administration that are supported by Trump's Democratic opponent, Vice President Kamala Harris. City officials acknowledge growing pains from the influx of some 15,000 Haitian immigrants but say there's no evidence to support the claim they are consuming anyone's pets.

More than 30 bomb threats have been made against schools, government buildings and city officials' homes since last week, forcing evacuations and closures. Springfield also canceled its annual celebration of diversity, arts and culture in response to the threats, and on Tuesday, state police were deployed to city schools.

Here are some things to know about the situation in Springfield:

Who's behind the hoax threats?

Foreign actors, primarily. That's according to Ohio's governor, Republican Mike DeWine, who revealed that most of the threats are coming from overseas. The governor's office says a criminal investigation by multiple law enforcement agencies determined the "vast majority" of the threats were international in origin. Officials did not provide more information on how investigators determined they came from a foreign country, nor would De-

"More than 30 bomb threats have been made against schools, government buildings and city officials' homes since last week, forcing evacuations and closures. Springfield also canceled its annual celebration of diversity, arts and culture in response to the threats, and on Tuesday, state police were deployed to city schools."

Wine reveal the name of the country.

What's being done?

DeWine sent dozens of members of the Ohio State Highway Patrol to all 18 city schools, where sweeps will be conducted twice a day to prevent further disruption and help reassure parents and students the buildings are safe. Even with the increased police presence, though, many parents still kept their kids home from school on Tuesday.

Meanwhile, security cameras have been stationed at strategic spots in the city, and a bomb-sniffing dog was sent to Springfield and will be available round-the-clock.

DeWine pledged $2.5 million over two years to increase support for primary health care. The state highway patrol is also helping local law enforcement with traffic enforcement. DeWine said many Haitians are inexperienced drivers and are unfamiliar with U.S. traffic laws.

How is the city responding?

Springfield never wanted the spotlight — not in this way.

On Tuesday, city officials said that misinformation and falsehoods about Haitian immigrants have sowed fear and division, disrupted learning and cost taxpayer dollars. In a statement, they begged public figures, community members and the media to "move beyond divisive rhetoric and instead work toward fostering unity, understanding and respect." The statement did not mention Trump or Vance by name.

Springfield Mayor Rob Rue has said the immigrant influx is straining police, hospitals and schools. He has also criticized the federal government, saying the city asked for help months ago. But he called on national leaders Tuesday to "temper their words and speak truth."

Why did so many Haitians move to Springfield?

Jobs and word of mouth. Springfield shed manufacturing jobs and its population decreased significantly as a result toward the end of the last century. But the city has made a concerted effort to lure employers and Haitians immigrants have helped meet rising demand for labor in factories and warehouses. Word spread, and Haitians began arriving in greater numbers over the last few years.

Haitians in Springfield and elsewhere came to the U.S. to flee violence in their home country. Many Haitians are here under a federal program called Temporary Protected Status, which allows them to temporarily live and work in the U.S. because conditions are considered too dangerous for them to return to Haiti.

What are Haitian immigrants saying?

Members of the Haitian community say they felt uneasy even before Trump and Vance picked up and amplified the lies about pet-eating, as longtime residents chafed at the new arrivals' impact on jobs, housing and traffic.

"Some of them are talking about living in fear. Some of them are scared for their life," Rose-Thamar Joseph said last week at Springfield's Haitian Community Help and Support Center.

At a church service on Sunday, Mia Perez said her daughter was evacuated from school twice last week.

"Kids in school are being asked by other kids: 'How does the dog taste? How does the cat taste?'" Perez said. "She's asking, 'Are we the kind of Haitians who eat this kind of stuff? Is it true? What's happening?'"

"This is a conversation that I was not ready to have with my daughter," Perez said. "I felt disrespected of our culture."

VP Kamala Harris meets with National Association of Black Journalists members in Philadelphia

By Marco Cerino—PHILADELPHIA TRIBUNE, an NNPA Newspaper

Vice President Kamala Harris sat down Tuesday for a conversation with members of the National Association of Black Journalists in Philadelphia, just weeks after former President Donald Trump did the same at the group's national convention in Chicago.

Harris' 45-minute interview at WHYY took a different tone than Trump's. While reporters Tonya Mosley of NPR, Gerren Keith Gaynor of The Grio and Eugene Daniels of Politico challenged Harris at times on topics like gun policy, Israel and the economy, she was respectful and not combative.

Harris also created a contrast between herself and the former president when addressing the controversy over false claims regarding Haitian immigrants in Ohio.

She discussed an awareness of the "impact of my words" from her previous elected offices and how she sees the responsibility that goes with the power and prestige of the presidency.

"When you have that kind of microphone in front of you, you really ought to understand at a very deep level how much your words have meaning," she told the crowd of about 180 attendees.

"When you are bestowed with a microphone that is that big, there is a profound responsibility that comes with that.

"It is an extension of ... the public trust and understanding what that public trust means. It means that you have been invested with a trust to be responsible in ways you use your words, how you conduct yourself."

This is the first election since 2000 that both major party candidates participated in interview sessions with the group's members.

Harris was unable to meet with members during the con-

She also committed to supporting a two-state resolution to the ongoing conflict in Gaza, calling for a ceasefire, return of hostages, no new land seizures by Israel, and barring Iran from further interference in the region.

Harris also repeated many of the pledges she has made in the past, from restoring the protection among young Black men, a group targeted by Republicans with negative messaging and attempts to convince those who thought Trump's economy better suited their desires, she acknowledged that some

One week after her impressive performance in the presidential debate held across the street from WHYY at the National Constitution Center, Harris seemed even more comfortable with this setting.

She mentioned that bomb threats in Springfield, Ohio, over accusations against Haitian immigrants had canceled school picture day, referring to the false stories as "a crying shame."

The event was organized as an opportunity for NABJ members and students from historically Black colleges and universities to see professionals interview the vice president, as they did with Trump's appearance at the convention in July.

When asked about the "joyful warrior" persona that has traveled with Harris during the campaign, including in attack ads that try to show her laughing as a lack of seriousness, Harris had a message to the students and others.

"There are some times when your adversaries will try to turn your strength into a weakness," she said. "Don't you let them. I find joy in the American people."

Harris continues her campaign with seven weeks to go before Election Day on Nov. 5.

tions of Roe v. Wade to providing a $50,000 tax credit for new businesses.

She said her administration was responsible for the lowest Black unemployment in generations and the most small businesses started in decades.

While many affinity groups, particularly in the Black community, have organized in support of Harris and her running mate, Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz, the Democratic nominee is not taking anything for granted.

When asked about support feel alienated and underserved.

"I think it's very important to not operate from the assumption that Black men are in anybody's pocket," she said.

"Black men are like any other voting group — you got to earn their vote, not assuming I'm going to be handed it because I'm Black, but because the policies and perspectives I have understand what we must do to recognize the needs of all communities, and I intend to be a president for all people."

Her answers showed an empathy and understanding that hasn't always come through the cacophony of this campaign.

While she talked about her mother's journey toward homeownership, not every answer included a personal story. She acknowledged the costs — financial and personal — of taking care of loved ones of all ages. She talked about how the mothers of homicide victims in San Francisco asked for her by name, knowing she would treat them with dignity.

How Kamala Harris Talks About Race Issues

By Keith Boykin, Word In Black via theatlantavoiced.com

To understand what Kamala Harris said to the National Association of Black Journalists on Tuesday, you gotta understand the Republicans' cynical race strategy.

Anytime Kamala Harris says something pro-Black, Trump and the Republicans will use it against her to convince white people that she can't be trusted.

And anytime she says something that isn't pro-Black, they will still use it against her by getting Black people to criticize her for not doing enough.

A month ago, Donald Trump lied to NABJ that Kamala Harris only recently turned Black, so when she sat down with the group in Philadelphia to take questions from Black journalists, she didn't say everything that some Black people wanted her to say — but she said almost everything she could.

She forcefully condemned recent lies about Haitian immigrants promoted by Trump and JD Vance: "I know that people are deeply troubled by what is happening to that community in Springfield, Ohio. And it's gotta stop."

"And we gotta say that you cannot be entrusted with standing behind the seal of the President of the United States of

"To win the presidency, Harris needs at least 42 to 43% of the white vote, which means she has to convince a sufficient number of white Americans that she can represent them — while still holding onto Black and Brown voters. It's a juggling act. How do you maintain your street cred with Black and Brown voters without alienating sensitive white voters?"

America, engaging in that hateful rhetoric." She described Trump's rhetoric as "a crying shame," a response based more on empathy than anger.

But, she did not specifically endorse a policy of reparations for slavery.

Although she supported legislation to study reparations when she was a senator in California, she spoke in broader terms today as the Democratic presidential nominee.

"We need to speak truth about the generational impact of our history," she said, mentioning slavery, redlining, and Jim Crow laws.

She spoke about student loan debt, medical debt, bias in home appraisals, and Black maternal mortality, but she put the onus to fix these issues more on Congress than executive action.

I support reparations, and I've written about it in my two most recent books. But believe it or not, Kamala Harris gave the right answer.

Here's why.

Her job is to get elected in a country where most Americans oppose reparations. Although 77% of Black Americans support reparations, only 18% of white Americans do.

Even in liberal California, nearly two-thirds of white voters oppose reparations. In a country that is 75% white, that's a non-starter.

We can't expect a Black woman running for office to explain and sell to white America the complex and unpopular idea of paying reparations to Black people in a three-month campaign while she's still introducing herself and her policies.

To do so is to make her a sacrificial lamb for a movement that we haven't even built the momentum for on the ground.

To win the presidency, Harris needs at least 42 to 43% of the white vote, which means she has to convince a sufficient number of white Americans that she can represent them — while still holding onto Black and Brown voters. It’s a juggling act. How do you maintain your street cred with Black and Brown voters without alienating sensitive white voters?

Some critics point to an out-of-context quote from an interview Harris did in 2019 when she said, “So, I’m not going to sit here and say that I’m going to do something that’s only going to benefit Black people.”

What they don’t quote to you is the rest of the answer, where she explains that “any policy that will benefit Black people will benefit all of society.”

Clearly, she supports race-specific policies that benefit Black people, including HBCU funding, affirmative action, and debt relief for Black farmers.

But as a Black politician in a predominantly white country, she still has to remind white Americans that those policies benefit them, too, by creating a more equitable society.

A Black Democratic candidate for president faces a frustrating double standard that does not apply to a white Republican like Trump.

Trump is not expected to do anything to help Black people, so all he does is show up with a wayward rapper or pastor every four years, and people grade him on a curve because the bar is so low.

But here’s the other part of the equation. Kamala Harris also needs a Democratic Congress to enact her agenda.

Republicans now control the House, and Democrats hold a narrow 51-49 seat majority in the U.S. Senate.

Republicans are expected to pick up the Senate seat in West Virginia with the retirement of Joe Manchin, and they’re hoping to defeat Democrat Jon Tester in conservative North Dakota.

If they win those two seats, Republicans will take control of the Senate and block any progressive legislation, and possibly Supreme Court Justices, for at least the next two years.

If you think Democratic senators are going to win North Dakota and West Virginia with a Democrat at the top of the ticket calling for reparations, you haven’t been paying attention to race issues in America.

There’s a method to the madness from Republicans. They continue to launch racist attacks against Harris because they’re desperately trying to get her to fight on controversial race and culture issues.

Trump wants Kamala Harris to attack him for being racist instead of focusing on her broader agenda for America.

He knows that if he can get her to engage, they can mislabel her with the “angry Black woman” trope.

That’s why he continues to lie about The Congo releasing inmates from insane asylums into the United States.

That’s why Trump and Vance are promoting racist rhetoric about the White House smelling like curry and fried chicken if Kamala Harris gets elected.

They’re not just motivating their base. They want Harris to say something to turn off white voters.

She was wise not to take the bait. It may not be the truth we want to hear, but she understood the assignment.
