National day of rest for Black women: Embracing the importance of self-care

Learn how Black women can prioritize well-being on the National Day of Rest and beyond. Discover effective strategies to recharge and promote restfulness.

BY SERENA SUMMER, article courtesy of rollingout.com

Monday, December 2, was National Day of Rest for Black Women, a day dedicated to encouraging Black women to step back from their busy lives and focus on their well-being.

While the fast-paced nature of daily responsibilities may make it difficult to take a break, this day serves as a reminder of how crucial it is to embrace rest.

Just like Black Girl Day Off in October, the National Day of Rest emphasizes the importance of taking time for yourself—something that should not be limited to a specific date on the calendar.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), adequate rest is directly linked to numerous health benefits, including better heart health, improved immunity, and enhanced mental well-being.

Taking the time to rest, especially for Black women who are often juggling multiple roles, is essential to achieving long-term health and maintaining balance.

Understanding the importance of rest

Rest is not just about sleeping—it's about replenishing your body and mind in various ways.

There are seven types of rest experts suggest we should consider: physical, mental, emotional, sensory, creative, social, and spiritual. Recognizing which type of rest you need at any given moment can significantly improve your overall well-being.

Prioritizing these forms of rest can help you feel more centered, energized, and ready to face the demands of daily life.

Eight ways to promote restfulness

Whether you're working, at home, or simply looking to incorporate more rest into your daily routine, here are eight effective methods to promote restfulness:

Power off during breaks:

Make a habit of turning off your phone notifications during breaks. Resisting the urge to multitask and disconnecting from digital distractions allows you to fully recharge.

Keep one day sacred:

Dedicate at least one day each weekend or during your time off solely for relaxation.

Avoid filling this day with errands or social obligations—use it to focus on activities that nourish your soul.

Prioritize sleep: Establish a bedtime routine to ensure you're getting quality sleep each night.

Sleep is critical for both physical and mental health, so make it a priority.

Engage in restorative activities:

Incorporate calming practices like yoga, meditation, or taking walks in nature. These activities help restore your energy and reduce stress. Find the ones that bring you the most peace and make them part of your routine.

Take time off: If possible, use your paid time off (PTO) to disconnect from work without the pressure of major holidays or family events. This will give you the opportunity to truly recharge and refocus.

Learn to say no: Setting boundaries is vital for preserving your energy. Protect your time by saying no to commitments that drain you or add unnecessary stress.

Connect with others: Surround yourself with supportive and uplifting individuals. Positive social connections contribute to a sense of well-being and help ease stress.

Explore different types of rest: Rest comes in many forms, from creative outlets to spiritual practices. Experiment with different ways to rest and see which works best for you.

Conclusion
The National Day of Rest for Black Women is an important reminder to prioritize rest, self-care, and mental health.

In a world that constantly demands productivity, taking time for yourself is essential. By recognizing the various types of rest and implementing strategies to promote them, we can cultivate healthier, more balanced lives.

Last Monday should serve as the beginning of a lasting commitment to self-care.

Rather than being a one-day event, let's embrace rest as an ongoing practice that fosters well-being and balance in our lives.

By uplifting each other and nurturing a culture that values rest, we can ensure that self-care becomes an essential part of our routine—not just a special occasion.

Ex-RNC chair warns Trump will wreck economy with 'bully' threats

By Travis Gettys, courtesy of Raw Story via newsbreak.com

MSNBC's Michael Steele laughed at Donald Trump's tariff threats after Canada's prime minister Justin Trudeau flew to Florida to ask the president-elect about the proposal himself.

Trudeau had dinner with the former president Friday at Mar-a-Lago after he threatened to impose 25-percent tariffs on Canadian products if the neighboring country didn't stop what he called the flow of drugs and migrants across the northern border, and the former Republican National Committee chair tried to imagine how their conversation went.

"I get it, I get what Tim Ryan was saying about, yeah, you got to go do the thing," Steele said.

"I would have done it from Canada. You know, look, it's like, I think this playing into Donald Trump's ego is part of the problem and, you know, bullies bully, and we know he's going to do whatever he is going to do.

"You've just got to draw the line with him but, you know, Canada has to figure out for itself, and he figured it would be smart to go down to Florida and spend time and hopefully not get Donald Trump to do the thing he's going to do anyway."

The prime minister issued a statement afterward noting that tariffs would raise the cost of consumer goods, which Trump had promised to reduce during his campaign, but Trudeau

SCHOOL SEGREGATION WIDENS RACIAL ACHIEVEMENT GAPS AMONG BLACK, WHITE AND HISPANIC STUDENTS

By Mary A. Spiro,
American Sociological Association, article courtesy of phys.org via Newsbreak.com

New sociological research finds that school segregation continues to widen racial achievement gaps among Black, Hispanic, and white students in U.S. public schools.

Analyzing standardized test scores from millions of students, researchers concluded that these gaps grow fastest in school systems where Black and Hispanic students are concentrated in higher-poverty schools than their white peers.

The study, "Is Separate Still Unequal? New Evidence on School Segregation and Racial Academic Achievement Gaps," is published in the December 2024 issue of the American Sociological Review.

The research team, led by Sean F. Reardon of Stanford University and Ericka S. Weathers of the University of Pennsylvania, looked at standardized test scores and segregation data from grades 3 through 8 in the 2008–09 through 2018–19 school years from nearly all U.S. public schools.

Erin M. Fahle and Demetra Kalogrides, both of Stanford University, and Heewon Jang of the University of Alabama, co-authored the manuscript.

Public schools were desegregated following the U.S. Supreme Court decisions

Brown v. Board of Education (1954) and Green v. County School Board of New Kent County (1968).

From the 1960s through the 1980s, Black students gained access to more well-resourced schools with higher per-pupil spending and lower student-to-teacher ratios.

However, in many regions of the U.S., desegregation was temporary, and segregation has grown in recent years.

The findings of this study underscore plify the effects of residential segregation and racial disparities in income, wealth, and early childhood educational opportunities.

The study suggests that without systemic change, these disparities are likely to persist, limiting economic and social mobility for future generations of Black and Hispanic students.

Key Findings:

- Racial achievement gaps grow more quickly in districts where Black and Hispanic students attend higher-poverty schools than their white peers.

- Part of the reason that segregation leads to widening achievement gaps is that segregated education systems concentrate minority students in schools that have fewer experienced and skilled teachers, leading to fewer opportunities for academic success.

- More research is needed to identify all the ways in which segregation affects students, but systemic changes in housing, school policies, and funding are necessary to close these gaps.

The authors conclude that without efforts to address school and residential segregation, racial disparities in education will continue to limit opportunities for Black and Hispanic students, affecting economic and social mobility for generations.

More equitable school assignment policies, investment in underfunded schools, and promoting connections between economically dissimilar communities could help mitigate these disparities.

that segregation remains a current and persistent driver of educational inequality.

The authors conclude that racial segregation is harmful because it concentrates minority students in high-poverty schools, which are, on average, less effective than lower-poverty schools.

Viewed in the broader context of systemic inequality, segregated schools am-said he had no reason to doubt the president-elect would carry through on his threat.

"Here's the thing," said MSNBC's Alicia Menendez. "There's almost like, go ahead — 25 percent tariff on these goods?"

"During, in the aftermath of an election where people were saying, the price of goods, the cost of living is my motivation for coming out to vote."

"So my question, my question to Trudeau is what did you put on the table to tell him he needs to back off of stupid," Steele added.

"Maybe a calculator," Menendez interjected. "Let me explain to you what it's going to cost you over here."

"Draw a map for you," Steele offered. "You're going to see a 30 percent increase on the cost of good. The reality to your point of where the voters are, they, and Tim said this as well.

"Someone understands their pain and their problem. Well, he is going to bring more pain with this policy. It is not a policy that alleviates the economic struggle you are in, it exacerbates it.

"The thing about it is, again, I just don't know if people really fully appreciate how interconnected all aspects of our economy are. It's not just leveling a tariff on produce or on manufactured goods, it is the ripple effect, how that impacts the supply chain of other goods and services.

"So, you know, when you want to play the tariff game, there's going to be a price that the American people are going to pay and, you know, I guess Trudeau is trying to get

Black America doesn't have to shop at Walmart

By Liz Courquet-Lesaulnier, article courtesy of Word In Black via triangletribune.com

Let's be clear: Walmart needs Black America a heck of a lot more than Black America needs Walmart.

Wielding roughly $1.8 trillion in spending power this year, Black folks' economic clout is undeniable. We get to choose where we spend our hard-earned cash during the holiday shopping season and beyond.

But Walmart — one of many companies that made lofty promises about fighting systemic racism after George Floyd's murder — just pulled the plug on its diversity, equity, and inclusion initiatives.

Now, three weeks after Donald Trump's election, they claim they want to be "a Walmart for everyone." And the anti-woke bros on the right are trading high-fives, claiming they forced the retail giant to abandon its DEI initiatives.

Yes, DEI, the root of all so-called reverse racism in America. Because for some folks in this nation, DEI is code for anything that gives the appearance of supporting Black people, communities or businesses.

It's not that Black people thought the post-George-Floyd-murder racial reckoning would last forever. Our ancestors lived through Reconstruction, so we know better.

But back on June 12, 2020, just days after Floyd's murder, Walmart's CEO Doug McMillon emoted in a blog post about how the company's goal was "to help replace the structures of systemic racism, and build in their place frameworks of equity and justice that solidify our commitment to the belief that, without question, Black Lives Matter."

McMillon pledged to examine every aspect of Walmart to ensure the company was prejudice-free. He waxed poetic about a conversation he had with a Black female employee about racial micro-aggressions.

He pledged $100 million to a Center for Racial Equity that would "address the root causes of gaps in outcomes experienced by Black and African American people in education, health, finance and criminal justice systems," according to Walmart's website. Walmart, he vowed, was on a "journey in support of racial justice and equity."

One thousand, six hundred twenty-eight days later, that journey is over.

The Center for Racial Equity? Closing. Racial equity training for employees? Not today, Satan. Using the phrase "DEI" in corporate communications? Axed.

Walmart now says it wants to foster "a sense of belonging." Apparently, as journalist Judd Legum quipped on Bluesky, "Walmart has solved racism."

Right-wing anti-DEI activists like Robby Starbuck are popping champagne, claiming they pressured the company into ditching its "woke" policies. Starbuck, a former music video director, regularly posts lines like "It's a fact that DEI is antiwhite," and "DEI IS racism and deserves to die," on X.

In a lengthy post on the social media platform, Starbuck insinuated that his conversations with Walmart — the nation's biggest, most influential retailer — led to this rollback, a move that will "send shockwaves throughout corporate America."

Walmart touts itself as Black America's biggest private employer and has long been a retail giant in the Black community. A 2023 analysis by Collage Group identified Walmart as our favorite brand, due to the company's investments "in Black enrichment, and taking a stance on social matters."

But here's the other side of the (continued on page 8)

Three-in-four Young Wisconsinites Say They're Willing to Work 60-Hour Weeks to Climb the Career Ladder, Finds Study!

Across the nation, people take varied paths in how they approach their work lives. For some, the focus is on striking a balance, ensuring their job supports a fulfilling life beyond the office.

Others adopt a more relaxed 'work to live' philosophy, treating their careers as a means to fund their personal interests. At the other extreme, however, a growing group of ambitious young professionals is emerging.

These individuals pour everything into their careers, prioritizing professional growth above all else.

In their pursuit of success, they willingly forgo weekends, social gatherings, vacation time, and even put off major life events like starting a family.

Career.io, the all-in-one platform for career guidance and success, conducted a survey of 3,000 young professionals to pinpoint where America's most ambitious workers reside.

A striking 73% of Wisconsinites under 25 reported they'd be willing to clock 60-hour work weeks to climb the career ladder.

This figure surpasses the national average of 61%, meaning the Badger State's young professionals rank among the most ambitious in the nation.

More specifically by city, Wisconsin has 2 cities with the most ambitious young professionals in the country:

#47 Madison

Madison's blend of academic excellence and a thriving tech scene makes it a standout destination for young professionals.

Home to the University of Wisconsin, the city is a hub for research, healthcare, and technology, attracting talent from around the country.

Madison's vibrant downtown, extensive bike paths, and picturesque lakes create a unique environment where professional ambition and quality of life go hand in hand.

#59 Milwaukee

Milwaukee's blend of Midwestern friendliness and economic dynamism makes it an appealing destination for young professionals.

The city's strengths in manufacturing, healthcare, and brewing, combined with its emerging tech and creative sectors, provide a diverse range of career opportunities.

Milwaukee's revitalized downtown, affordable cost of living, and vibrant cultural scene create a welcoming environment for ambitious individuals.

"These cities represent more than just job opportunities; they embody the ambition and resilience of a new generation willing to put in long workweeks to achieve their goals," says Amanda Augustine, career expert at Career.io, "Each location fosters a unique environment where driven young professionals can thrive and redefine career success on their own terms.

While we recognize the dedication of these professionals, working 60 or more hours a week is not necessarily a sustainable or healthy approach for the long term. A more balanced approach offers a better path to success."

Methodology

3,000 18-25 year old respondents were carefully chosen from a geographically representative online panel of double opt-in members.

This selection was further tailored to meet the precise criteria required for each unique survey.

Throughout the survey, we designed questions to carefully screen and authenticate respondents, guaranteeing the alignment of the survey with the ideal participants.

To ensure the integrity of our data collection, we employed an array of data quality methods. Alongside conventional measures like digital fingerprinting, bot checks, geo-verification, and speeding detection, etc. each response underwent a thorough review by a dedicated team member to ensure quality and contextual accuracy.

Our commitment extended to open-ended responses, subjecting them to scrutiny for gibberish answers and plagiarism detection.

Black America doesn't have to shop at Walmart

coin: research revealed that Walmart stores in Black and Latino neighborhoods consistently get worse reviews for service quality. Walmart's been hit with multiple discrimination lawsuits.

Remember that $17.5 million class-action lawsuit? Yeah, the 2009 one where Walmart settled claims that it discriminated against Black people trying to get truck driving jobs? That was a thing.

Just two years ago, an Oregon jury ordered Walmart to pay $4.4 million to a Black man after a white Walmart employee racially profiled and harassed him in one of their stores.

A quick internet search nets plenty of other examples of people suing Walmart over shopping while Black experiences, Black employees suing for being repeatedly passed over for promotions, and Black employees suing because they were being called racial slurs in the workplace.

Let's call Walmart's abandoning DEI efforts what it is: a slap in the face to the Black folks who've kept its registers ringing for decades. A company that caves to racist attacks coded as "anti-woke" does not respect Black America.
