UNCF, Mayor Johnson announce mayor's 10th Annual Masked Ball

Event raises funds for local students

Milwaukee Mayor Cavalier Johnson and the United Negro College Fund (UNCF) recently announced they are hosting the 10th annual Mayor's Masked Ball Event March 29 at the Pfister Hotel at 6 p.m.

Attendees get the opportunity to wear decorative masks and dress their best for a night of dinner and dancing.

Over the past nine years, the event has brought in over $1.35 million in scholarship funds to students in the community who will attend historically Black colleges and universities supported by UNCF.

Support is also provided to local students attending college in Wisconsin. In 2024 alone, the organization raised $216,579. According to Johnson, the scholarships make an impact on students who "strengthen communities."

"These scholarships, they're critical, very critical to the success of young people here in our community," Johnson said.

"UNCF scholarships, they may very well be some of the only ways that students, locally, are able to afford the chance to go to college."

Along with Johnson, members of the community and UNCF spoke during a news conference Friday.

Each of the speakers spoke highly of the impact local students have made thanks to the event.

"I see the impact of the UNCF scholarships and HBCU graduates every day. I see it in the faces of individuals I work with, as well as those who are talented and respected in our community," Nina Johnson, UNCF Mayor's Masked Ball co-chair, commented.

MKE moving to change diversity findings

Compiled by MCJ staff

Milwaukee has made little progress in terms of diversity when social, economic and academic factors are considered according to Wallethub's annual report on diversity and equity.

Wallethub is a data collection agency which gauges the impact of socioeconomic factors on the American paradigm.

According to the report, Milwaukee ranks 89th among major cities for 'diversity.'

But in terms of economic diversity, segregation, and educational achievement, the state's largest city is 'south' of 350th.

According to the latest report, Gaithersburg, MD is the most diverse city in America, followed by Silver Spring, MD, Houston, TX, New York City and Los Angeles.

Two years ago Milwaukee was rated as the worst city for African Americans in the country.

Charlotte, North Carolina was considered the best based on economic, academic and sociocultural factors. That needle has not moved much.

Milwaukee's educational failures, its poverty index and segregated housing patterns contribute to its diversity status.

That status is all the more disingenuous given that Milwaukee is led by Black politicians at every level. It could be said they inherited negative social paradigms.

Noted Chip Lupo, Wallethub analyst, "America is undergoing an extreme makeover, thanks to rapid demographic diversification."

"For example, the percentage of people in the U.S. who are multi-racial increased from just 2.9% in 2010

Statement by civil rights groups slam Trump administration's disinformation & racist assault on education equity

WASHINGTON, D.C. —Legacy civil rights organizations are sounding the alarm on a letter from the Trump administration's Department of Education that threatens funding to pre-K through 12 schools, colleges, and universities.

In a Feb. 14 letter issued to pre-K-12 schools, colleges, and universities that receive federal funding the Department falsely claims that diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) programs leverage racial preferences and uses scare tactics to pressure schools to eliminate programs that teach the truth about American history and celebrate all students.

The letter threatens to eliminate funding from any institutions that operate programs the Department deems "DEI," using a baseless mischaracterization of federal law for support.

Federal law is clear. Schools have a moral and legal duty to ensure that every student has the opportunity to thrive. In Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard and Students for Fair Admissions v. University of North Carolina, 600 U.S. 181 (2023), the Supreme Court reaffirmed that diversity remains a commendable and worthy goal.

Time and time again, courts have rejected attempts to mischaracterize efforts to level the playing field and create welcoming environments as racial bias—whether through training, eliminating standardized testing, or other means.

The Trump administration seeks to roll back the progress we've made to dismantle Jim Crow segregation in our schools. The reality is, Black students—as well as Latino, Asian American, Indigenous, and other underrepresented students—are often denied the same educational opportunities and resources that white students receive. Conditions for students of color in districts across the country are frequently separate and unequal.

Contrary to what the Trump administration now asserts, schools that do not address these persistent barriers remain in violation of federal law.

To succeed as a nation, we need to develop the talents and skills of all students, including Black students, by providing the resources and opportunities for all young people of every race, gender, sexual orientation, religion, ability, and socioeconomic status to excel.

We urge schools and educational institutions everywhere to continue to follow the law and reject the administration's racist falsehoods.

Inequitable access to housing

Honoring Black History month by closing the Black homeownership gap!

In a study by the Joint Center for Housing Studies of Harvard University, the racial homeownership gap is most striking for Black households.

At 41.7 percent, Black households have the lowest homeownership rate nationally—30.0 percentage points lower than white households.

Historically, Milwaukee's Black neighborhoods have struggled to gain access to homeownership. Housing discrimination is rooted in a long history of racist policies.

Policies like redlining meant Black Milwaukeeans were denied access to equal loans and housing opportunities.

Banks refused to lend in predominantly black neighborhoods, leading to a lack of investment opportunities, further infrastructure, and a decline in housing stock.

While white borrowers were receiving financial assistance in buying homes, Black borrowers with even higher incomes were denied mortgages.

While the Fair Housing Act was enacted in 1968, there continues to be discrimination in lending today.

According to this study, Black families are 1.8 times more likely to be denied a loan (2019 HMDA data), even when they have the exact same debt-to-income ratio as their White counterparts.

Impact Today

Milwaukee’s legacy of redlining and housing inequality has had profound implications.

A 2020 study by the Center for Economic Development at the University of Milwaukee, found Milwaukee ranked 49th among the nation’s 50 largest metros for Black homeownership.

While we know that closing the persistent gap between Black and white homeownership in Milwaukee and beyond will require serious change at an institutional level, Acts Housing is dedicated and focused on increasing Black homeownership.

Here’s How:

Acts Power Pack Workshops: education cohorts for families with the most barriers

Individual Development Account (IDA): Access and matching/incentive funds

Down payment assistance grants: DPA helped families already working with Acts repair their credit and attain a mortgage loan.

Closing the Gap

Five years ago, with Acts support, Black families made up ~20% of families purchasing homes for owner-occupancy. In 2023, Black families made up about 54% of homebuyers.

“As the U.S. diversifies, it must stamp out hatred and promote unity, and there’s a lot of work to do. Hate crimes have risen significantly in recent years, with notable increases in major cities, for instance.”

Despite presidential rhetoric to the contrary, it’s important to embrace diversity – and it’s good for the economy, too.

Not only have waves of immigration changed the face of the nation, they’ve also brought in fresh perspectives, skills and technologies to help the U.S. develop a strong adaptability to change.

“Economies generally fare better when they openly embrace and capitalize on new ideas. Conversely, those relying on old ways and specialized industries tend to be hurt more by changes in the market.”

Among the latest findings:

- Gresham, OR, has the highest income diversity, 17.6% higher than the average of all cities.
- Silver Springs, MD, has the highest educational attainment diversity, 48.1% higher than the average of all cities.
- Germantown, MD, has the highest racial and ethnic diversity, 117.4% higher than the average of all cities.
- San Jose, CA, has the highest language diversity, 136.7% higher than the average of all cities.
- Jackson, WY, has the highest birthplace diversity, 123.5% higher than the average of all cities.
- Sparks, NV, has the highest industry diversity, 40% higher than the average of all cities.
- South Valley, NM, has the highest occupational diversity, 40% higher than the average of all cities.
- College, AK, has the highest work-class diversity, 50% higher than the average of all cities.
- Parkersburg, WV, has the highest marital-status diversity, 24.1% higher than the average of all cities.
- Dover, NH, has the highest age diversity, 13.3% higher than the average of all cities.
- Winooski, VT, has the highest household type diversity, 23.1% higher than the average of all cities.
- Waipahu, HI, has the highest household size diversity, 57.1% higher than the average of all cities.
- Saint Louis, MO, has the highest religious diversity, 137.5% higher than the average of all cities.

Specifically for Milwaukee, we ranked 388th for income diversity, 282nd for educational attainment and 31st for racial and ethnicity diversity.

Here are some companies that NO LONGER SUPPORT Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI).

WHY ARE YOU STILL SUPPORTING THEM?

A growing number of prominent US companies have announced they have scaled back or eliminated Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) initiatives.

Their retreat from DEI began after a June 2023 U.S. Supreme Court ruling against affirmative action in college admissions and accelerated after President Donald Trump's executive orders against all federal diversity initiatives.

Now longstanding programs to improve the hiring and promotion of African Americans and other minority workers in corporate America are now under serious threat.

The attack on diversity has been swift. After taking office on Jan. 20, President Trump issued a series of executive orders aimed at dismantling Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) programs across the federal government and the private sector. The attack on diversity is bad for a multi-ethnic country and bad for business which needs a diverse workforce. DEI programs seek to ensure fairer representation for groups historically marginalized such as African Americans, women, LGBTQ+ community members, and disabled people.

Diversity helps businesses by boosting innovation, expanding talent pools, and enhancing brand reputation, ultimately leading to improved financial performance and a more competitive edge. A diverse workforce opens up opportunities to access a wider range of talent and skills, allowing businesses to tap into a broader pool of potential employees with unique experiences and expertise.

A diverse workforce can better understand and meet the needs of a diverse customer base. This allows businesses to tailor their products, services, and marketing strategies to resonate with a wider range of consumers.

However, if companies retreat from committing to the principles and practice of diversity in a multi-ethnic America, why should they be supported? The Philadelphia Tribune's response to the Trump administration's attacks on diversity and democracy begins with reporting the truth and holding those in power accountable.

More specifically, we ask you to strongly consider whether you should continue to spend your dollars with companies who have publicly announced their decision to retreat from diversity. Here's a look at some companies that have retreated from DEI:

Amazon

Amazon said it was halting some of its DEI programs, although it did not specify which ones. In a Dec. 16 memo to employees, Candi Castleberry, a senior human resources executive, said the company has been "winding down outdated programs and materials, and we're aiming to complete that by the end of 2024."

leadership levels. It also intends to end a program that encourages its suppliers to develop diversity training and to increase the number of minority group members represented within their own leadership ranks.

Walmart

The world's largest retailer confirmed in November that it would not be renewing a five-year commitment for an equity racial center set up in 2020 after the police killing of George Floyd.

Ford

CEO Jim Farley sent a memo to the automaker's employees in August outlining changes to the company's DEI policies.

Lowe's

In August, Lowe's executive leadership said the company began "reviewing" its programs following the Supreme Court's affirmative action ruling and decided to combine its employee resource groups into one umbrella organization. Previously, the company had "individual groups representing diverse sections of our associate population."

John Deere

The farm equipment maker said in July that it will no longer sponsor "social or cultural awareness" events, and that it would audit all training materials "to ensure the absence of socially-motivated messages" in compliance with federal and local laws.

Tractor Supply

The retailer in June said it was ending an array of corporate diversity. Tractor Supply said it would be eliminating all of its DEI roles while retiring current DEI goals.

Unfortunately the list of companies retreating from diversity is growing. We will post this list in print, online and on social media when available. If new companies announce their withdrawal from diversity we will add them to the list of companies whose practices we are now calling into question.

We must speak out and send a loud and clear message to corporate America that a retreat from diversity means a withdrawal of our support and practices will be documented and provided to our readership.

Target

The retailer said in January that it was ending a program it established to help Black employees build meaningful careers, improve the experience of Black shoppers and to promote Black-owned businesses.

Target, which operates nearly 2,000 stores nationwide and employs more than 400,000 people, said it also would bring to an end its diversity, equity and inclusion, or DEI, goals it previously set in three-year cycles.

The goals included hiring and promoting more women and members of racial minority groups, and recruiting more diverse suppliers, including businesses owned by people of color, women, LGBTQ+ people, veterans and people with disabilities.

Meta

Meta Platforms Inc the parent company of Facebook and Instagram said it was getting rid of its diversity, equity and inclusion program, which featured policies for hiring, training and choosing vendors.

McDonald's

Four years after launching a push for more diversity in its ranks, McDonald's said that it is ending some of its diversity practices, citing the U.S. Supreme Court decision that outlawed affirmative action in college admissions. McDonald's said on Jan. 6 that it will retire specific goals for achieving diversity at senior Anthony Benezet, the Quakers, Christianity, and the 'war' against American slavery!

Do you know who Anthony Benezet is? Or was?

Think about an early incarnation of Martin Luther King, Jr. ... in whiteface.

Or Frederick Douglass's brother from another mother.

Better yet, include him in my short list of early American superheroes who risked life and limb to end the evil empire of American slavery, racism, and misogamy. In the process, biblical incongruities were challenged.

Benezet is an essential figure in the battle to end 'American apartheid.' He was the Lone Caucasian Ranger who upset Christianity's tenets on slavery, calling into question its doctrine that posited God's supposed approval of slavery versus love for humankind---neighbors—regardless of color.

Benezet, a Quaker, questioned how Christians could, on one hand, be governed by the Golden Rule, yet support scripture advocating and endorsing human bondage and the subsequent evils and cruelty that accompanied that questionable Judea-Christian doctrine.

Before you dismiss my disingenuous analysis or call me an atheist for questioning the gospel, I've been a Christian for most of my life.

I have flirted with Islam, ventured down the road of African and Kemetic Spirituality, and have worked toward a master's degree in theology.

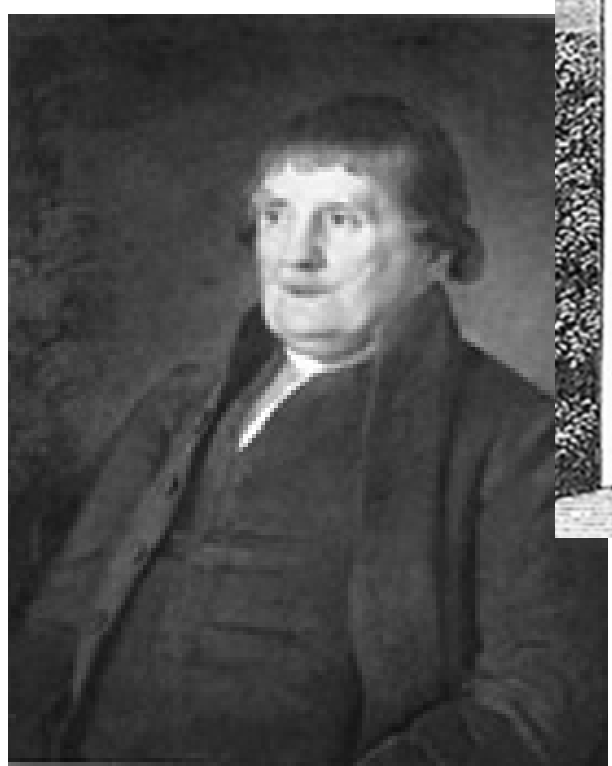

Aside from my bible study, I have picked up and read dozens of books (yeah, some Black folks do read, as you apparently do, scripture, structure, and science fiction, no matter how small the words).

But I have never gotten past the Old and New Testaments that advocate, support, and condone the oldest profession...no, not that...the other one—slavery.

Check out Peter 2: 18-20, Ephesians 6: 5-9, or 1 Timothy 6: 1-2.

Sadly, the mountain I can not hurdle is that there is NO condemnation of slavery in the Bible, which was not 'outlawed' until the 19th century in the West---aka America---and continues in parts of the world to this day.

So, don't castigate or castrate me for discussing a biblical subject during Black History Moment (no misprint); instead, ask why the Western Christian church that Frederick Douglass denounced waited 2,000 years after the last rewriting of the Bible to outlaw slavery.

Anthony Benezet: 1713-1778

Isn't that newfound embrace of redemptive Christianity a contradiction to the bible?

You can hide behind Barney Fife's (Andy Griffin show) tarnished badge all you want, but the banner of the Confederacy was condoned by biblical scripture (albeit not its racist implementation), which means Benezet was at odds with scripture.

He was also on the wrong side of history for his support for the equality of women and the rights of Native Americans.

(If you made it this far into my column, there is no sense in you turning back to page two for a human interest or soft story on Black inventors. Instead, challenge yourself by reading the rest of this eye-opening story).

For the record, I discovered Benezet while researching White heroes of Black History.

Benezet started the first American (underground) school for Black girls in 1750. Twenty years later, he started the first 'public' school for Africans (it's recorded as African Americans, but that's not true, given that we were not granted citizenship until the 14th amendment a century later).

The more I researched Benezet. However, I learned that Quakers were the most prominent, and some say 'only' Christian denomination to fight slavery in America.

That status led me to discover that their abolitionist campaigns put them in conflict with other 'Christian' denominations.

Of more significant controversy was the

Illustration of Anthony Benezet teaching free Black children from what looks like the Bible.

“Benezet is an essential figure in the battle to end ‘American apartheid.’ He was the Lone Caucasian Ranger who upset Christianity’s tenets on slavery, calling into question its doctrine that posited God’s supposed approval of slavery versus love for humankind—neighbors—regardless of color.”

Quaker's position that Jesus, aka Yeshua, was not God but instead sent by God as a prophet to advance the 'Golden Rule.'

Moreover, man---men---from Constantine to King James, altered biblical text for political/cultural/financial reasons.

Benezet literally risked his life as an abolitionist, not only suggesting that Black people were equal in the sight of God and human intellect, but it was a sin to hold them in bondage.

He echoed the commentary of 18th-century author Jonathan Edward, who wrote the Golden Rule, which undermines the Bible passages on slavery. And, "once the Golden Rule brought African Americans to the status of neighbors, slavery became a sin."

Imagine that.

In short, I've come to recognize that not all of the conductors on the Freedom Train were Black, nor were all of the abolitionists who provided refuge and sanctuary sites for the Underground Railroad people of color.

In fact, few were.

The Whites who hid and quartered escaped slaves literally risked their lives. Whites who were even suspected of harboring slaves after the Fugitive Slave Act was enacted---hundreds, maybe thousands---were murdered, lynched, and burned at the stake.

Their participation in the war---yes 'war'---to counter biblical tenets was costly, to say the least.

Were they wrong for questioning and fighting against so-called 'biblical truths.' Was it worth them going to hell, eternal damnation, and endless torture, as many, if not most, Christians believed...then.

Ironically, and without factual concurrence, Christians today and the Christian church reject the evil of slavery. Why? Did they all undergo an epiphany following the Civil War? Indeed, they did not erase objectionable scripture, as most of us do when it inconveniences us,

Be honest; all of us 'quasi-Christians' have followed in the footsteps of Thomas Jefferson and stripped passages from the Bible that undermine our lifestyles.

We sin every day, ignoring scripture that denies us pleasure: Fornication, babies out of wedlock, lying, stealing, and worshiping the God of money over the Spiritual entity.)

I bet a dollar against your dime that you were not taught about Benezet in government schools (or of the early American challenges of Quakers over American apartheid and slavery).

You---we---need to ask why? And further, where would America be if Christians taught the Golden Rule from the onset? Is it a coincidence that conservatives are waging a battle against the false premise of Critical Race Theory? Maybe it should be Christian Race Theory?

We probably wouldn't be upset with 'King Kong Trump's' elimination of DEI, affirmative action, and his assaults on true Black history had the Christian Church provided the leadership God intended.

In fact, there would probably be no need for Black History Moments if the founding fathers followed the Golden Rule (Matthew 1:12 and Luke 6:21) as Anthony Benezet advocated.

Hotep.

From Elon, With Love: You're Fired!

OPINION by Ben Jealous

It was February 14. But what nearly 400 Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) employees got that day were not Valentines. They were pink slips.

The firings touched critical roles in EPA offices across the country, including dozens of scientists at the agency's Chicago office.

The American people did not vote for toxic air and poisoned water. But that will be the consequence as Donald Trump and Elon Musk move not only to dismantle the programs that keep our families healthy and safe but to fire, recklessly, the dedicated civil servants who have devoted their careers to doing the same.

That same wave of civil servant layoffs ensnared about 3,400 US Forest Service employees and roughly 1,000 employees of the National Park Service (NPS). You might be struggling to make sense of a decision to institute big cuts at an agency tasked with managing forests and preventing and fighting wildfires immediately following some of the most destructive wildfires this country's ever seen.

But an examination of these mass firings also shows that senselessness and sloppiness -- and utter inefficiency -- are hallmarks of Trump and Musk's so-called Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE). Further illustrating that sloppiness: across agencies, some of the most egregious terminations of vital workers had to be rescinded days later.

Imagine vacationing with your family at one of America's beloved national parks and getting stuck in a bathroom for hours because something is wrong with the lock but the park doesn't have a locksmith.

Nate Vince, Yosemite National Park's locksmith, was also fired on Valentine's Day. He explained in a post on Instagram that he was just three weeks shy of the end of his one-year probationary period, after apprenticing for four years under the park's previous locksmith.

He also noted Yosemite is the size of Rhode Island with "more locks than a small city," for everything from a federal court to administrative buildings, gun safes, and more. "Without a locksmith I'm deeply concerned for the safety and security of the park and people in it," Vince said. "The people that fired me don't know who I am, or what I do. They simply don't understand this park and how big and complex it is."

Park Ranger Alex Wild, also fired on Valentines Day, was the only emergency medical technician at Devils Postpile National Monument, a rock formation and waterfall along California's Pacific Crest Trail.

And the layoffs hit other popular sites like Grand Canyon National Park, which prompted the Association of National Park Rangers to warn of slower rescue efforts, as well as reduced programs and more litter.

Following layoffs that gutted the team managing rentals within Gettysburg National Military Park in Pennsylvania, visitors received notice their reservations had been indefinitely canceled."

The list of examples goes on. And again, this is not what the American people voted for. Three quarters of Americans see the National Park Service in a positive light and 88% of Americans (including 85% of Republicans) want National Park wildlife better protected.

The financial wrongheadedness of the Trump-Musk slash-and-burn project also jumps out. Their supposed efforts to save taxpayers money by laying off thousands of hardworking civil servants and cutting food aid, science, education, medical research and more are going to end up costing Americans more out of their own pockets. In some cases, the programs and agencies being gutted will cost taxpayers far more in economic growth and direct government revenue than the amount of the "cuts."

For 2025 and the past few years, the National Parks Services budget hovers at just over $3 billion per year. In 2023 alone, that budget (a relatively high $3.75 billion that year) supported 415,000 jobs and $55.6 billion in economic output. To put it another way, for every $1 invested, American taxpayers see a nearly $15 boost to our national economy.

This is part-in-parcel with the sloppiness -- and also dishonesty -- with which DOGE is operating. The total personnel costs for the federal civilian workforce are only 4.4% of our federal budget. Foreign aid -- which has been at the top of the headlines since Trump and Musk decided to decimate USAID -- has only ranged between 0.7% and 1.4% of the budget since 2001.

As they gut key agencies and the federal workforce, what are some examples of where this administration is focusing our tax dollars? Well, there is the $200 million international ad campaign by the Homeland Security Department, personally requested by Trump, "thanking" the president for his immigration and border policies. And, of course, there are the massive tax cuts for America's very wealthiest that are really the crown jewel of the Trump-Musk agenda.

The great John Lewis, who would have turned 85 this past Friday, wrote "When you see something that is not right, you must say something. You must do something. Democracy is not a state."

It is an act, and each generation must do its part to help build what we called the Beloved Community, a nation and world society at peace with itself."

That act of democracy must not happen only in election years. It is up to all of us to hold power accountable, keep sounding the alarm, and keep speaking out for justice for all. Because, as Rep. Lewis also reminded us, "A democracy cannot thrive where power remains unchecked and justice is reserved for a select few."

Ben Jealous is the Executive Director of the Sierra Club and a Professor of Practice at the University of Pennsylvania.

Filmmakers Seek Old Home Movies of Black Milwaukee

The Milwaukee County Historical Society is currently producing a television documentary about the history of Milwaukee's Black community. It will start with the arrival of Joe Oliver, who settled here in 1835 to work as a cook for fur trader Solomon Juneau, and continue through the Black Lives Matter movement of today. The project is led by John Gurda, a writer and historian who has been studying his hometown since 1972, working with Black historians Clayborn Benson III, Reginald Jackson, and Dr. Robert Smith of Marquette University.

The documentary will rely heavily on historical photographs from local archives including the Wisconsin Black Historical Society and Museum, but community input is being actively sought. In order to give the film an authentic, grassroots flavor, the producers are looking for both still photos and especially home movies that depict everyday life in the Black community in decades past. The subjects could include backyard barbecues, house parties, birthday celebrations, musical performances, amateur sporting events, graduations, weddings, anniversaries, and anything else that shows what daily life was like in the past. Movies made before 1990 are of particular interest, and a modest honorarium will be paid for images actually used in the documentary. Anyone interested in helping the project can contact the producers through the Milwaukee Community Journal. Call the newspaper at 414-265-5300 between 11 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Meeting held to save historic, Black designed and owned Central City Plaza!

Kim Robinson (standing fourth from the right), a freelance photographer with the Milwaukee Community Journal, a retired Milwaukee police officer, and son of Alonzo Robinson, Jr., the first Black registered architect in Wisconsin (inset photo above) posed with several community members during an informational meeting to save from demolition the Central City Plaza, located at 600 W. Walnut St., the first Black-owned, Black-operated center in Wisconsin. It was designed by Robinson's father and stands as his largest and most significant commercial project. The plaza is one of Milwaukee's rare examples of 'New Formalism' architecture. It represents a crucial piece of Black entrepreneurial and architectural history. The meeting, held at Pilcrow Coffee, 416 W. Walnut St., informed residents and businesses in the area about the significance of the plaza, who designed it, and to get those attending the meeting involved in its preservation to recognize its significance and the need for the community to protect a piece of Milwaukee's Black history, strengthen community investment, and honor the city's architectural legacy. Another meeting about the plaza is set for April 15, at 9 a.m., in room 301-B, inside City Hall, 200 E. Wells St.

On Martin Luther King Jr. Day, amid the pomp of Donald Trump's second inauguration, Supreme Court Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson stood out from the crowd.

Seated among a sea of white conservatives and billionaires, Jackson's ceremonial black robes were complemented by a striking cowrie shell collar—a deliberate and powerful choice.

This was not merely a fashion statement. The cowrie shells have been long revered in Black and African cultures, symbolizing community, protection, resistance, and survival—values that stand in stark contrast to the ideologies currently taking center stage in the White House.

For the first Black woman to serve on the nation's highest court to wear such a collar was an act of quiet defiance.

Jackson's collar spoke of resilience and a deep connection to the cultural legacies that continue to shape the fight for justice.

What is the Spiritual Significance of Cowrie Shells?

Throughout the African diaspora, these tiny, oval-shaped shells hold both spiritual and cultural significance.

They originate at the bottom of the Indian and Pacific oceans, formed on the back of a sea snail.

When the snail dies and decomposes, the shell remains, leaving countless of these strong, speckled shells scattered across the ocean floor to make their way to multiple shores daily.

Cowrie shells have had multiple uses throughout history and African diasporic culture.

In West Africa, cowrie shells were used in religious rituals where the white shell is associated with purity, health, growth and insight. Cowrie shells are still used today in Yoruba divination rituals.

THE HISTORICAL AND SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE OF COWRIE SHELLS

The shells, called "the mouth of the orisha," are used by a diviner when communicating with the orishas landing either face up representing a positive answer, or face down representing a negative answer from the deities.

In some African traditions, cowrie shells symbolize fertility as their curved shape resembles a pregnant woman's belly.

Cowrie shells were also an important source of wealth from as early as the 14th century.

They're believed to be the original Pan-African currency originating in West Africa, but being used in trade all over the world throughout Africa, Asia, Europe, and the Americas.

Unlike coins or paper money, cowrie shells were durable and visually appealing, with a variety of patterns across the tiny domed shell that made them harder to counterfeit.

Cowries could be frequently found in fashion and traditional clothing, a practice that continues today.

Shells have been sewn into traditional African masks and robes, adorning garments with the spiritual symbol.

Today, cowrie shells are used to embellish braids, locs, and other natural hairstyles as a nod to our African roots.

The shells can also be seen in some fine jewelry brands and most recently in the judicial bib worn by Justice Brown, where dozens of cascading shells were arranged to adorn her robes (with a matching pair of cowrie earrings).

Some historians believe the shell was sewn into clothing and hair of enslaved Black Americans as an amulet for protection from the horrors of slavery and to ward off evil, making Justice Brown's choice to wear them as Trump enters his second term all the more poignant.

Black women are particularly vulnerable under the new administration. These tiny shells are symbols of abundance, safety, power, and connection for Black people at a time when we need these values the most.
