MILWAUKEE ROTARY CLUB AND JUNETEENTH REPRESENTATIVES HIGHLIGHT THE HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE JUNETEENTH HOLIDAY!

As part of its Connecting with Community initiative, the Milwaukee Rotary Club hosted members of the Rotary leadership and representatives of Northcott Neighborhood House for a presentation on Milwaukee's Juneteenth Day celebration and its history.

Speakers from both organizations emphasized that Juneteenth is both Black history and American history, and they invited Rotary members, residents, and visitors to join Milwaukee's enduring Juneteenth observances.

The presentation also described the partnership between Northcott Neighborhood House, the host of the annual Juneteenth celebration, and Summerfest that was launched in 2025. That partnership will continue this year with musical entertainment, a food drive, and a ticketed event, "The Taste of Juneteenth" on the Summerfest grounds.

Juneteenth celebration presenters included Clayborn Benson, Executive Director and founder of the Wisconsin Black Historical Society; Tony Kearney, Executive Director of Northcott Neighborhood House; Sarah Pancheri, President & CEO of Milwaukee World Festival; and Sidney Purifoy Mahone, the 2025 Miss Juneteenth.

This year marks the 55th anniversary of Milwaukee's Juneteenth celebration, one of the longest-running celebrations in the United States.

Academic & Leadership

This fall semester, Alec Romero registered for two courses—Children Impacted by Incarceration and Restorative Justice in Education—at the Racine Correctional Institution through the Education Preparedness Program (EPP).

EPP creates a mixed-blended learning environment where formerly or currently incarcerated individuals and Marquette students take classes together, with a mission to reduce higher education barriers by providing college-level courses to incarcerated populations, including students who have already taken a college course and those who have never considered pursuing higher education.

Through this experience, Alec listened to personal stories, observed restorative justice practices in schools and prisons, and examined data on incarcerated populations.

Through readings, weekly restorative justice circles, and classmates' lived experiences, Alec deepened an understanding of education as a privilege and reflected on the opportunity to pursue higher education at Marquette while taking college-level coursework alongside incarcerated students.

Here's how Milwaukee's sewer system functions, and why we flooded in August and April!

By Devin Blake, article courtesy of Neighborhood News Service

Flooding in Milwaukee in August and again in April has caused all sorts of headaches for residents, prompting questions about future flooding in the area.

The repeated flooding of many Milwaukee homes and streets has drawn criticism over the city's preparedness, response to and ability to handle extreme weather.

Several Milwaukee County supervisors echoed calls for a third-party audit of the company Veolia, which manages wastewater treatment facilities for the Milwaukee Metropolitan Sewerage District.

In a statement released Monday, eight supervisors said Veolia's management of treatment facilities needs to be scrutinized before MMSD moves forward with a proposed contract extension.

Meranda Davis, who lives on the North Side, remains unimpressed with local efforts to address flooding and help residents.

"I got some food stamps — that's it," Davis said. "I had to lose a lot of my stuff in my basement because it was soaking wet and moldy."

Public works officials say it is often less about system failure than system capacity.

'Sewers did not fail'

Much of the attention has been toward the city's sewer system, as videos and firsthand accounts from residents showed people scrambling to clean and in some cases remove the lids of city sewers as waters rose and rain pounded around them.

But according to Tiffany Shepherd, marketing and communications officer for the Milwaukee Department of Public Works, "The sewer system did not fail." However, she said, "These systems have limits to how much water they can handle."

City sewers date back to the 1860s, with the oldest remaining sewer on record from the 1880s, Shepherd said.

Residents, city planners and local leaders all play a role in reducing the risk of future flooding, said Bill Graffin, public information manager for the Milwaukee Metropolitan Sewerage District.

"We need everybody's help," Graffin said.

Different sewer systems

Milwaukee Metropolitan Sewerage District, or MMSD, serves 29 municipalities across the region, including the City of Milwaukee and surrounding suburbs.

Each municipality operates its own sewer systems, while MMSD manages a deeper, regional network of large pipes.

Throughout the municipalities, there are two main types of sewer systems: separate and combined.

The most common is the separate system, which carries stormwater and sewage in different pipes.

In separate systems, water enters street drains, flows through storm sewers and discharges into local waterways.

Wastewater from homes and businesses travel through private laterals into municipal sewers, then flows to MMSD's regional system and on to one of two treatment facilities.

In other areas — primarily in about one-third of the city and parts of Shorewood — combined sewer systems are used.

Combined sewer systems carry both stormwater and sewage in a single pipe. In these areas, street drains and catch basins feed into the same network that also carries wastewater from homes and businesses. That combined flow then moves to MMSD's regional system and, under normal conditions, to treatment facilities.

Flood risks

Graffin said it is important to distinguish between different types of flooding.

When MMSD refers to flooding, it is often talking about rivers overflowing their banks during major storms. That type of flooding is driven by the overall volume of rainfall.

Street flooding is closely tied to storm sewer capacity.

It occurs when sewers cannot handle the volume of rain or when drains are clogged — something that can happen in both separate and combined systems, especially during intense, short bursts of rainfall.

When water collects in streets and low-lying areas, it can enter homes through foundations, basement win-downs or failed sump pumps. Basement backups are a related but distinct problem. Water can back up through plumbing systems when wastewater cannot move through pipes fast enough, often because of capacity limits in local or regional systems, according to Graffin. But blockages can occur for various reasons in private sewer laterals and lead to backups – and this can happen for various reasons unrelated to rainfall. To help prevent widespread backups, MMSD's system includes overflow points that release excess water into nearby rivers. "An overflow is a relief valve," Graffin said. Davis said she experienced both types of flooding in April. Water flooded in from a plumbing backup and also into her basement from the street. Common Ground launched the campaign calling for a third-party audit of Veolia, the company that has managed Milwaukee water treatment facilities for nearly 20 years. The campaign originated from a whistleblower named Steve Jacquart, a former MMSD intergovernmental coordinator. Jacquart provided public testimony on April 30 alleging long-running operational and maintenance problems with the water treatment facilities. These problems, he said, reduced treatment capacity, resulting in an increased risk of sewer overflows and basement backups during storms. Another former Veolia employee came forward Wednesday, May 13, alleging serious problems at the company. MMSD is currently considering renewing a new contract with Veolia. In response to Jacquart's allegations, MMSD Chair Corey Zetts said: "Commissioners discuss monthly reports on performance and maintenance metrics in our monthly public meetings, and if there was any credible evidence of mismanagement of billions of dollars of our public infrastructure, the company would not be on the short list for another 10-year contract." 'Some heavier storms' Officials say these systems were not designed for the storms that are becoming more common. "There's no question that we're starting to see some heavier storms move through," Graffin said. When large amounts of rain fall in a short period of time, storm sewers can struggle to keep up, overwhelming system capacity and allowing water to pool in streets and low-lying areas. Additionally, flood risk from overflowing waterways may be far greater than official maps indicate. "One of the major lessons from recent events is that serious flooding can occur well outside areas traditionally understood as high-risk floodplains," said Cassandra Libal, executive director of the Milwaukee County Office of Emergency Management.

In the Kinnickinnic River watershed, for example, estimates of homes in the floodplain increased from about 60 to 660 when updated rainfall data was used, Graffin said. The changes have not been formally adopted because updating federal flood maps requires an approval process. Libal said planning for future flooding cannot wait. "(Federal Emergency Management Administration) maps remain important for regulatory and insurance purposes, but emergency management planning cannot rely exclusively on map updates that may take years to complete," she said. What is being done? Flood risk reduction will depend on coordination across agencies, Libal said. "Flood risk reduction is a shared responsibility because watersheds and storm impacts do not follow jurisdictional boundaries," she said. Milwaukee County Executive David Crowley, Milwaukee Mayor Cavalier Johnson and MMSD Executive Director Kevin Shafer have formed a regional Flood Mitigation Task Force to coordinate a response. MMSD has already spent hundreds of millions of dollars on flood control and identified projects totaling about $900 million, Shafer said in a joint statement announcing the task force. But there are limits to what these new projects can accomplish. "The reality is that we (or any city) simply cannot build a sewer system that could contain every storm event," Shepherd said. One important current strategy, officials say, is expanding everyone's ability to manage water where it falls. Since 2011, the city has constructed more than 500 installations of green infrastructure and added over 36 million gallons of storage since 2019, Shepherd said. Individuals can also play their part. "We encourage residents and businesses to capture as much stormwater runoff as they can on their properties," Shepherd said. Residents can help by using rain barrels, rain gardens and porous concrete, Graffin said. A rain barrel may "seem like a small token, but it's 55 gallons of water that we keep out of the sewers when we need that extra capacity," he said. The city had also planned on requiring residents to bag leaves instead of raking them into streets to help reduce clogged storm drains. The policy was adjusted after major pushback. Residents will now have the option to bag their leaves or rake them to the street. Davis doesn't take much comfort from what she's heard from local officials. "They are really not it," she said. "I need help now." —Jonathan Aguilar is a visual journalist at Milwaukee Neighborhood News Service who is supported through a partnership between CatchLight Local and Report for America.

BACKDOORING RACISM

Kamala Harris calls out Supreme Court

By Black Information Network

While the Voting Rights Act of 1965 was designed to prohibit voting practices that could result in Americans being denied the right to vote based on their race, the justices argued that race-based redistricting did not comply with Section 2 of the act.

"When [Section 2] of the Act is properly interpreted, it imposes liability only when circumstances give rise to a strong inference that intentional discrimination occurred," Justice Samuel Alito wrote in an opinion for the majority. "Properly understood, [Section 2] thus does not intrude on States' prerogative to draw districts based on nonracial factors, including to achieve partisan advantage." This has opened the door for several Republican-led states, such as Louisiana, Alabama, and Tennessee, to propose new congressional maps that erase majority-Black districts on the basis of partisan gerrymandering and grant the party additional seats in the November midterms. Harris, along with former President Barack Obama, previously denounced the ruling on social media in April. "Today's Supreme Court decision effectively guts a key pillar of the Voting Rights Act, freeing state legislatures to gerrymander legislative districts to systematically dilute and weaken the voting power of racial minorities – so long as they do it under the guise of 'partisanship' rather than explicit 'racial bias,'" Obama wrote in a statement posted to X. Harries echoed Obama's dissent in her own post, stating the Voting Rights Act was "one of the last remaining federal pro-had two remarkable careers in his lifetime. He spent 39 years as an award-winning broadcast journalist with Milwaukee's WTMJ-TV, covering news and sports and earning a reputation for excellence in storytelling. While working full time at the station, he enrolled in Milwaukee Area Technical College's photography training program and later attended the U.S. Army's military photography school at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey. He ultimately earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in film from UWM in 1987. During his time at UWM, Benson received a grant to produce "Black Communities," a documentary examining Black housing, migration, settlements and trade skills in the United States, Wisconsin and Milwaukee. The film aired on NBC affiliate WTMJ-TV, on public television stations across the state and became a formative project in shaping his future work. While producing the documentary, he recognized that the history and heritage of Black Americans in Wisconsin were widely scattered and inadequately preserved. In response, he founded the Wisconsin Black Historical Society/Museum in 1987 to collect, preserve and share that history while also serving as a neighborhood anchor and resource. He has built and maintained an unparalleled collection documenting Black life in Milwaukee that has been used by researchers, students, journalists and community groups, and Benson remains one of the state's most influential voices. A life-long learner, Benson went back to earn a master's degree in public history from UWM's College of Letters & Science in 2024 at the age of 75. Benson's many honors include the City of Milwaukee Living Legacy Award, the Milwaukee Press Club Hall of Fame Award, the Emmy Silver Circle Award from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences regional chapter, and the UWM Alumni Lifetime Achievement Award.

Wesley Hunt Says Redistricting Maps Aren't Jim Crow 2.0

By Black Information Network Texas GOP Rep. Wesley Hunt claimed that efforts by Southern states to eliminate majority-Black districts following the Supreme Court's historic ruling do not represent a new era of Jim Crow.

Rep. Hunt Only' signs. I don't, I promise you. I am a Black man that is representing a white-majority district in Texas." Following a Supreme Court ruling last month striking down a majority-Black district in Louisiana and weakening Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, several Southern states are proposing new congressional maps that critics say would weaken Black voting power and favor Republicans politically. Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-MS) described the ruling as "Jim Crow 2.0" during a May 2 interview with CNN's Victor Blackwell, warning that the proposed maps in several states would eliminate several majority-Black districts. Most recently, the U.S. Supreme Court voted on Monday (May 11) to lift an injunction requiring Alabama to keep its current congressional map — which includes two majority-Black districts — until the 2030 census, allowing the legislature to pass a new map that reduces that number to one district, according to Politico. Last week, Tennessee Gov. Bill Lee signed a bill into law splitting Memphis, which is about 63% Black, into three districts, forcing Black residents into the neighboring, majority-white Nashville area. "It's devastating," Yvette Clark, Chair of Congressional Black Caucus (CBC), told NBC News on Tuesday (May 12), adding that as much as one-third of the caucus's 58 members could be impacted by redistricting efforts. "People have sacrificed so much to make this a more perfect union. And here we are, in 2026, seeing this massive regression in all the gains that have been made. It's painful."

EPA Announces more than $15 Million for Wisconsin to Address PFAS in Drinking Water

CHICAGO—U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has announced more than $15 million in new Emerging Contaminants in Small or Disadvantaged Communities (EC-SDC) grant funding to address PFAS and emerging contaminants in Wisconsin communities that need it most.

This new funding is part of a comprehensive, lifecycle-based strategy to address per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS) that underscores EPA's commitment to Making America Healthy Again by ensuring clean water for all.

"This funding represents another crucial step to deliver clean, safe drinking water to the communities that have been carrying the burden of PFAS for too long," said EPA Region 5 Administrator Anne Vogel.

"By pairing significant federal investment with strong partnerships across Wisconsin, we're making real progress to reduce exposure, strengthen local resilience, and ensure every household can trust the water coming from its tap.

"This is what Making America Healthy Again looks like in practice."

The EC-SDC grant program is a $1 billion national investment that helps communities address PFAS and other emerging contaminants.

In Wisconsin, $15,370,000 is available for communities, drinking water systems, and private well owners to help with testing, planning, and infrastructure projects addressing PFAS and other emerging contaminants included on EPA's Contaminant Candidate Lists (e.g., manganese, perchlorate, 1,4 dioxane).

With this grant allotment, the agency has made $5 billion in EC-SDC funding available through this program over five years.

More than $6.5 billion in low-interest financing is currently available through EPA's Water Infrastructure Finance and Innovation Act (WIFIA) Loan program, which can also be used to address PFAS.

Sustained investment of this scale helps drive down the per-system cost of treatment, generates real-world performance data that better informs utility decision-making, accelerates innovation in destruction and disposal technologies, and helps mitigate PFAS across the many forms in which it appears in source water.

Additionally, EPA's new PFAS OUTreach—or PFAS OUT—initiative is accelerating progress in addressing PFAS in drinking water.

This new program proactively works with communities and water systems to reduce exposure to perfluorooctanoic acid (PFOA) and perfluorooctane sulfonic acid (PFOS) in drinking water.

Recognizing that small, rural, and disadvantaged water systems often have fewer resources, PFAS OUT is specifically designed to ensure these communities are not left behind.

PFAS OUT will help every drinking water system dealing with PFOA or PFOS to effectively understand the challenge and reduce exposure as soon as possible while positioning them for successful compliance with enforceable drinking water standards.

EPA's multifaceted approach to reducing exposure to PFAS in drinking water also includes two proposed rules for public comment that uphold the National Primary Drinking Water Standards PFOA and PFOS while enhancing practical implementation and correcting the Biden-Harris Administration's failure to follow the clear requirements of the Safe Drinking Water Act.

Together with EPA's parallel work to address PFAS before it enters the environment, EPA is delivering real solutions to reduce PFAS exposure for all Americans.

Trump will NEVER be mistaken for a ‘great,’ ‘good,’ ‘okay,’ ‘ah-hight’ or ‘meh’ president!

I’ve been undertaking a research project in which I rank U.S. presidents’ policies that enhanced Black causes/civil rights.

In short, presidents who may not have necessarily been ‘friends’ of the Black community, but whose policies took bricks out of the walls of apartheid.

Through Saturday, when I participated in my monthly barber shop ‘nappy headed leadership conference’ at Sid’s on Hopkins, Barack Obama surprisingly ranked third, or fourth depending on how you fit the Affordable Care Act within my stated paradigm.

As I undertook my research, I quickly found that it is far easier to flip the script and rank the worse of the worse, than to subjectively rank those presidents who helped eliminate the barriers to justice and equal rights.

Among the worse—most bigoted--- was Andrew Jackson (who many Native Americans view as a son of Satan), James Polk, or more recently---20th century--- Woodrow Wilson, ‘Tricky Dick’ (Richard Nixon), and Ronald Reagan.

But while there may have been debate over who came in second, easily topping the list is Donald Trump, aka ‘King T,’ ‘Emperor Don,’ and Tarzan, with a small ‘t!’

It’s not sociocultural rhetoric to accuse the Trumpster with not only being a bigot (vs. racist), but of setting back civil rights 112 years, nine months and 12 days, according to my outdated calculator.

Trump, who has done more to undermine civil rights than any of his racist/bigoted predecessors, has authenticated my contention that there is a difference between racism and bigotry.

(Racism, in my lexicon, is someone who feels superior and/or hates people of another ethnicity—mostly out of jealousy. A bigot is someone with the power to legislate their hatred.)

In today’s twisted society, verbalization of someone’s ‘stupidity’ is not necessarily a sign of racism. A white teenager who recites gangsta rap whose lyrics include the contentious word nigger (n-word) isn’t a member of the White People’s Socialist Party or KKK.

But, it’s beyond rhetoric, for example, to post caricatures of Barack and Michelle Obama as apes, or refer to Haiti and African nations---the Motherland and ground zero for life and civilization---as ‘sh.thole’ countries.

And in terms of DT the DJ’s (square dance only) racist rhetoric, his BS was just the tip of the black iceberg.

He took his racism to the realm of bigotry on his first day in office when he outlawed DEI/affirmative action and fired any sister with rhythm or a weave.

Swinging from vine to vine, he used his microphone to announce the dismissal of dozens of Black officials who refused to kiss his ring, and or (stinky) backside.

To display his attempt at being gender neutral, he also dismissed General Charles Brown, chair of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

And it’s not a coincidence that Trump’s war on Affirmative Action—DEI—resulted in a quarter of Black people with the ability to legislate or hire and fire, being axed and told, as the Ray Charles song lamented, to “hit the road, Jack(lyn).”

Milwaukee County Executive David Crowley Highlights Emission Reductions in County Operations

New data confirms additional emissions reductions in County operations are result of measurable progress toward climate goals

County Executive David Crowley highlighted recently the continued progress in reducing greenhouse gas emissions from County operations, as part of an annual Climate Action 2050 (CA50) Plan update report.

The Milwaukee County Office of Sustainability reported a 48% decrease in greenhouse gas emissions through 2024 from its 2005 baseline. This marks additional progress beyond the previously reported 46% reduction and positions the County on track, if not ahead of schedule, to meet its interim goal of a 50% reduction in emissions by 2030.

“In Milwaukee County, we know that the climate crisis is a real, pressing threat to our environment, our economy, our health, and our quality of life,” said County Executive Crowley.

“At a time when federal climate leadership is stepping back, Milwaukee County is stepping forward. This milestone reflects my administration’s strategic investments and operational changes across County departments and service areas.

“We’re not just setting ambitious goals; we’re delivering results that put Milwaukee County on a clear path to meet our 2050 target and build a more sustainable, resilient future for our communities.”

The latest results are driven largely by reductions in emissions from County buildings and facilities, as well as transportation operations, both of which reached their lowest recorded levels to date, even surpassing reduced activity levels seen in 2020.

Marquette University and will serve as president of the multicultural advocacy organization, where students lead campaigns and advocate for social injustices within their communities and on campus.

Internship

This summer, Alec will intern at the Milwaukee Courthouse as a Courthouse Navigator through the Milwaukee Justice Center and AmeriCorps.

Alec is motivated to give back to the community and views this internship as a step toward that long-time goal.

With an interest in legal assistance, Alec aims to help community members better understand their rights and plans to do so as an AmeriCorps member with the Milwaukee Justice Center.

Both programs emphasize community impact by partnering with local organizations, schools, and programs across Milwaukee.

As a Courthouse Navigator, Alec will support individuals in completing documents, filings, and other paperwork to help reduce stress associated with legal proceedings.

Alec’s goal is to advocate for Spanish-speaking families by actively listening and helping connect them to accessible, affordable resources within the Milwaukee Justice Center and AmeriCorps-supported programs.

Research

Alec showcased a community-research project at the 3rd Community Impact Showcase at Marquette University, representing the Center for Urban Research, Teaching & Outreach (CURTO) and the Urban Scholars Program.

staff, and an immigration attorney, Alec helped raise awareness about the expanding landscape of surveillance technologies affecting youth, adults, women, and undocumented communities.

The project draws attention to limited data, privacy research, and literature on EM and aims to inform policymakers, stakeholders, and community advocacy organizations about law enforcement’s use and abuse of these technologies. Alec plans to present at the Midwestern Criminal Justice Conference next fall.

“Electronic Monitoring and Biometrics for Immigration Customs Enforcement (ICE): The Weaponization of Data” won an award at the Forward Thinking Research Symposium.

Alec Romero’s project was selected by the Marquette Center for Data Ethics and supported by Kathryn Storm and Robert Smith of CURTO.

The project examines ICE’s use of personal data and how technologies such as electronic monitoring reinforce mass incarceration through a technological dimension—creating a form of mass “ecarceration” that can deprive individuals of their rights.

Summary: Alec Romero’s work reflects a commitment to education access, restorative justice, and community advocacy through campus leadership, courthouse-based service, and community-engaged research.

Across academic coursework, the Milwaukee Justice Center/AmeriCorps internship, and award-winning research on surveillance technologies and electronic monitoring, Alec focuses on expanding access to resources and raising awareness of how systems and technologies impact communities.

Congressional Black Caucus Chairperson Yvette Clarke (D-NY)

Congressional Black Caucus Warns Redistricting Could Gut Membership

Article courtesy of the Atlanta Daily World

CBC Chair Yvette Clarke, D-N.Y., told NBC News on Tuesday (May 12) that as many as 19 of the caucus's 58 members could be impacted by the Republican efforts to redraw district maps before the midterms in several states. Although she claimed that the number is not guaranteed, the massive push by many Republican-led states to propose new congressional maps in the wake of the Supreme Court ruling eliminating a majority-Black district in Louisiana has forced her and other members to consider the worst-case scenario. "It's devastating," she said. "People have sacrificed so much to make this a more perfect union. And here we are, in 2026, seeing this massive regression in all the gains that have been made. It's painful." However, some House Republicans have reportedly tried to justify the ruling as a response to Democratic overreach, citing the recent Virginia redistricting referendum, which, despite being approved by voters last month, was struck down by the state Supreme Court for allegedly violating legislative procedure. "We had a 5-1 map in Louisiana, and it was Democrats who took that map to court because they wanted to try to draw more Democratic seats, and ultimately the 4-2 map that was ruled unconstitutional," House Majority Leader Steve Scalise (R-LA.) told NBC on Tuesday. "They did that in Virginia, too. Democrats have a history of going too far." House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries, D-N.Y., who is being propped up by Democrats as the potential first Black Speaker of the House, will be convening with House Democrats on Thursday (May 14) to discuss plans to "forcefully push back against the Republican redistricting scheme," per NBC. Several states have either already proposed or are pushing for new congressional maps that effectively wipe out majority-Black districts, often represented by the sole Democratic House member from the state. In Tennessee, lawmakers successfully passed a new proposal on May 7, splitting the state's only majority-Black district in Memphis — represented by Democrat Rep. Steve Cohen — into three separate districts that force Black voters out into the neighboring, majority-white Nashville and surrounding areas. Tennessee Gov. Bill Lee (R) signed the map into law the following day. Louisiana Gov. Jeff Landry (R) moved to suspend the state's May 16 primary elections for the House the day after the Supreme Court ruling, clearing the way for the legislature to remove one of the state's two majority-Black districts represented by Troy Carter and Cleo Fields. Fields's district is the same one the Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional in the Louisiana case. On Wednesday (May 13), the Louisiana Senate officially voted to advance a proposal that would eliminate Fields' seat by stretching Carter's district into Baton Rouge, per NBC, leaving the state with only one Democratic representative in the delegation. The U.S. Supreme Court also voted on Monday (May 11) to lift a lower court injunction requiring Alabama to continue using its current congressional map until the 2030 census, according to Politico. The legislature attempted to change the map in 2023 to include only a single Black district, rather than two. A bill passed by the Alabama legislature on May 8 would also reportedly require districts unaffected by the new map to be counted after the May 19 primaries, while ignoring affected districts. "It's Jim Crow 2.0," Rep. Bennie Thompson (D-MS) — whose seat is also threatened by an upcoming special session on redistricting in Mississippi's Old Capitol building — said in a statement. "Look at what they're doing in Louisiana. They're trying to stop the election and take representation from the Black community with no remorse at all. They just want to do it." In South Carolina, the Senate rejected a proposal from the House to extend the state's legislative calendar, allowing for consideration of a new congressional map proposal that potentially eliminates Democratic Rep. James Clyburn's seat, according to The Hill. While Clyburn's seat is preserved for now, he reportedly told NBC that he still considers the Supreme Court's ruling a major setback for Black lawmakers and a consequence of President Donald Trump's efforts to eliminate nationwide diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) initiatives and limit Black voting power. "You've got a president that's taken Black folks out of everything," Clyburn said. "So I don't want us to just look at this voting case in isolation. No, this is a comprehensive attempt on the part of this administration to redeem Jim Crow... He's trying to turn the clock back." Clarke also told the outlet that she reached out to other CBC members who may be affected by the redistricting, claiming the group is "not helpless in this moment" and that the backlash against Republicans will result in the new maps yielding only "momentary gains."

While MAGA Attacks Civil and Voting Rights Nationwide, Congressional Republicans Target Dedicated Civil Rights Defenders

House Judiciary Committee Hearing to Amplify Corrupt DOJ's Bogus Indictment of SPLC

People For the American Way President Svante Myrick released the following statement about the House Judiciary Committee's May 20 hearing targeting the Southern Poverty Law Center: "The Southern Poverty Law Center has saved lives and safeguarded civil rights by taking on bigots, haters, and violent extremists. It forced a murderous Klan organization into bankruptcy. It has infiltrated extremist groups and provided on-the-ground intelligence to law enforcement officials working to track and prevent violent threats. Americans should be grateful for the work SPLC has done for many years. "Because the SPLC has also documented and criticized hateful misinformation disseminated by allies of the Republican Party and Donald Trump, right-wing groups have repeatedly sought to smear and undermine the SPLC. "The bogus, politically motivated indictment of the SPLC is a sign of how corrupt the Justice Department has become during President Trump's second term.

"And this week's hearing is further evidence of the ways that congressional Republicans have abandoned their constitutional oversight responsibility."

Rather than promoting the ridiculous charge that the SPLC is "manufacturing" extremism, Congress should be investigating the corruption and abuse of power in Trump's Injustice Department. "The Justice Department was once the civil rights community's partner and ally. "Under Trump it has be- come a weapon to undermine rather than protect civil rights. We affirm our commitment to the civil and human rights principles that have moved America closer to its promise. "We affirm our solidarity with our colleagues in the struggle to make those promises real for every person."

America's public health crisis is bigger than just measles

OP/ED By Howard Dean

In the first three months of 2026, America logged roughly 1,600 measles cases — nearly as many as the total number for all of 2025, which was by far the worst year we've seen for the highly infectious virus in decades. In fact, because we've had more than 12 straight months of continuous measles spread, the nation should soon lose the measles elimination status we achieved back in 2000. I say "should" because Health and Human Services Secretary Robert F. Kennedy Jr. was granted a delay of the April 13 meeting of the Pan American Health Organization, where officials were expected to reach that embarrassing conclusion, until its annual meeting, which is scheduled for after the midterm elections. A coincidence, no doubt. Measles cases are spiking because the share of Americans who've received the measles, mumps and rubella vaccine — which protects 97% of people from getting the virus when exposed to it — has declined below the critical threshold recommended for community protection. Under the vaccine skeptic Kennedy's leadership, vaccination rates for other diseases are also trending downward, and could soon fall below their own respective thresholds, opening the door for all sorts of previously eliminated diseases to make a dangerous comeback. Our public health system isn't ready for these infectious diseases. Experts are already sounding alarms about underreporting, inconsistent data collection and delayed responses due to a lack of coordination between government centers and agencies, and weakened surveillance systems. Meanwhile, our most prominent public health leaders are actively taking steps to peel back decades of public health infrastructure that has improved and protected our communities. Last year, Kennedy threw a critical vaccine advisory panel into chaos by abruptly firing all of its experts and replacing them with his own picks — few of whom have any meaningful vaccine experience. Since then, the panel of self-described "rookies" has struggled to cast votes, flip-flopped on key decisions and attempted to overhaul long-standing vaccine guidelines, a move that was temporarily blocked by a federal judge in March due to legal challenges from public health groups. With the guiding document on vaccine guidelines set to expire April 1, Kennedy forged ahead and signed a new set of recommendations that, according to an attorney who has argued in court against his policies, "doesn't conform with the spirit" of the judge's order. This behavior fuels vaccine hesitancy, increases misinformation and completely destroys trust in public health institutions. Communities across the country will soon feel the consequences, if they haven't already. Infectious disease outbreaks drive up hospitalizations, increase the risk of long-term complications, strain health care systems and cost taxpayers.

And notably, they tend to disproportionately hurt the most vulnerable Americans. Falling vaccination rates leave immunocompromised individuals especially exposed. Many cannot receive certain vaccines and depend on high community vaccination for protection. Without it, they face a higher risk of severe illness. Older adults, young children and patients with underlying health conditions are also more vulnerable. Public health leaders must act immediately to restore transparent data reporting, consistent federal-state coordination and expert, science-driven advisory processes. And they must reinforce vaccination infrastructure, surveillance systems and rapid-response capabilities. If they don't, we'll soon all pay the price. Howard Dean is the former chair of the Democratic National Committee and former governor of Vermont. This piece originally ran in Salon.

Crowley Highlights Emission Reductions in County Operations

(continued from page 4) strategies, renewable energy adoption, and a focus on high efficiency equipment upgrades with driving down emissions. "We're seeing what happens when you make steady, intentional changes at scale," said Helle. "The result is more efficient services today and a clear path to keep reducing emissions moving forward." Milwaukee County's Climate Action 2050 Plan outlines a detailed roadmap to achieve long-term carbon neutrality, a 100% reduction in operational emissions by 2050. In April 2025, County Executive Crowley signed legislation formally adopting the strategic plan. Additional details on Milwaukee County's CA50 Plan progress are available through File No. 26-415 presented at the Committee on Community, Environment and Economic Development held on May 18, 2026.

Tennessee House Speaker Cameron Sexton has stripped all members of the House Democratic Caucus of their committee assignments following protests for the state's new Republican-backed congressional maps.

According to The Tennessean, Sexton removed the assignments on Tuesday (May 12) in retaliation for protests led by Democrats on the House floor as Republicans approved the maps. The maps essentially fractured the majority-Black Memphis into three districts.

This forces Black residents into neighboring areas, effectively eliminating the state's only Democratic House seat, represented by Rep. Steve Cohen.

The map was signed into law by Tennessee Gov. Bill Lee on May 7 following a special legislative session.

Sexton cited various actions by caucus members who stood with protestors during the voting process that were "aimed at disrupting the democratic and legislative processes and creating disorder on the House floor."

These include blocking aisles on the House floor, using prohibited props and noisemakers, and "instigating and encouraging disruptions of the legislative process" in coordination with protestors in the gallery.

With their removal, Democrats will no longer be involved in Tennessee's legislative process until bills reach a final floor vote or until a special legislative session is called. While most committees meet only when the legislative body is in
